Many Gifts Underwrite G-W Progress

WEBB ADMINISTRATION BUILDING EXPANSION
... shaded by fall-colored trees.

Building Addition Dedicated

An addition to the Webb Administration Building on campus was presented and dedicated during a Founders Day luncheon on Homecoming Day Oct. 29.

The building has been double in size at a cost of approximately $100,000. This addition, designed to complement and balance the architecture of the original structure, provides the space for all of the college's administrative offices to be housed in one building, for greater efficiency and clearer communication. In the past, administrative offices have been scattered in several buildings over the campus.

The Webb Administration Building was erected in honor of Mrs. O. Max Gardner, born Miss Fay Webb, her parents, Judge and Mrs. James L. Webb; her grandparents, the Rev. and Mrs. George M. Webb; and her great-grandparents, the Rev. and Mrs. James M. Webb. The beloved "Miss Fay" was the wife of the former North Carolina governor and benefactor of the college, which bears their family names.

Ralph Gardner, of Shelby, a son of Mr. and Mrs. Gardner, presented the building to the college at the dedication ceremony. Two of their grandsons, O. Max Gardner III and John Mull Gardner, were special guests.

Other special guests were Mr. and Mrs. T. R. Howdris of Trinity, Mr. and Mrs. Fred West of Gastonia, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Rice of Greenville, S. C., and Mr. and Mrs. Boyce Grindstaff of Forest City.

Founders Day and Homecoming on Oct. 29 was an appropriate time to review Gardner-Webb's progress in the past three years, as more than $2,800,000 in capital fund gifts are being translated into the purposes for which they were given.

More than 2,000 individuals and scores of business firms, industrial companies and foundations have given to the capital funds campaign, conducted in 12 areas of North and South Carolina.

The campaign not only has "assured senior college accreditation," but also is providing some of the finest facilities possible for Gardner-Webb's students and administration.

Earlier, the association committee of the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools had pointed out the needs for a major increase in library facilities and a better arrangement of physical facilities for the college administration. The need for a campus chapel had long been recognized.

Today, because of the capital gifts campaign and the sacrificial efforts of hundreds of people, these three needs have been met and more growth is in store for the future. The Webb Administration Building expansion is completed, as told about in articles and pictures on this page. The new Dover Memorial Library, described inside, is nearing completion. The John R. Dover, Jr. Memorial Chapel is in use.

In addition, the Craig Residence Hall for women will soon be under construction, slated for occupancy in fall, 1974. To house 90 students, the modern structure will be built adjacent to the present Nancy Residence Hall for women. The three-story building will feature air conditioning and carpeting, and will be occupied by students presently housed in a renovated men's dorm.

A planned "special events building" now being discussed would include an auditorium-convention center, facilities for student life and performing arts, classrooms and equipment for the department of health education and physical education, and would provide facilities for the college's intercollegiate athletic program. It would be utilized by the community as well as the college.

Recruiting: Telling About G-W

More than ever, recruiting new students is a major concern at Gardner-Webb College, just as it is at other private colleges all across the country.

It's vital that prospective students be introduced to the kind of program and "extra dimensions" education that Gardner-Webb offers, and that they have an opportunity to consider it as the source of their higher education.

One reason is that the current "crop" of high school students is smaller than in some past years. Another is that private colleges must in effect "compete" for students with tax-supported public opportunities for education.

To succeed, a private college must offer its own advantages, its own alternative to public facilities, to attract the qualified students who are essential to its continuing operation. It must need a need.

Gardner-Webb has been fortunate to maintain a steady enrollment and hopes to increase that pattern by "telling the Gardner-Webb story" to as many prospective students as possible.

Although all the college is involved in the recruiting progress, it's a major responsibility for Robert Alexander, director of admissions, and two members of the admissions staff, Raymond Davis and Wayne Smith, admissions counselors.

Throughout the fall and winter, they travel extensively in the Carolines and surrounding states on a tour of "college days" in high schools and preparatory schools, meeting seniors and telling them about GWC.

They also are in constant contact with individual students, answering their questions, pointing them through the application process and assisting them in investigating sources of financial help, etc.

VIP DAYS

The college offers a unique program for prospective students—VIP Days. High school students are invited to the college for a week-end of participation in campus life and discussions with representatives of the faculty, administration and students.

As stated in the VIP Days brochure, "Gardner-Webb wants satisfied students, therefore, we feel that VIP Days will help prospective students to enter school here knowing just exactly what the college has to offer in all areas."

The campus' next VIP Days weekends are scheduled for Feb. 24-25 and April 25-27. Any student who's interested may write the college for more information.

ALUMNI HELP

Alumni can play a very important role in recruiting. They offer a unique view of what the college can mean to an individual, and can give "personal testimony" to the college's influence on their own lives.

Alumni can help, say admissions officials, by telling the high school seniors they know about Gardner-Webb, urging them to investigate and consider the GWC program, and informing the admissions office of the names of interested students.

Dover Library To Be Heart Of Academics

The John R. Dover, Sr. Memorial Library now rising on campus will be the focal point of academic student at Gardner-Webb.

Educators say that no institution of higher learning can be greater than its library facilities. The new building, therefore, is being designed to be the foundation of academic excellence.

Designed by the architectural firm of Vespeles and Talley Associates of Shelby and built by Lortie Construction Co. of Charlotte, the structure will be occupied in the spring.

The 48,000-square-foot three-story building will have a book volume capacity of 350,000 and library study seating for 400. Non-study seating is a classroom, seminar auditorium and conference room will total 115.

In addition to the book stacks and seating areas, the library will include a center for teaching materials and audio-visual aids, music listening room, technical processing department, shipping and receiving point, administrative offices, staff lounge area, 11 individually enclosed study spaces for faculty-student research, and a special collection room.

Revival Held

A pastor of 26 years, Dr. J. Herbert Gilmore, pastor of the Baptist Church of the Covenant, Birmingham, Ala. was speaker at the annual Fall Revival on the campus Sept. 10-14.

Music director for the revival was David Penning, minister of music, Fortwood Baptist Church, Spartanburg, S.C.

Alumni: Take Part In G-W's Self-Study

Gardner-Webb alumni can assist the college in a unique way by responding promptly to the questionnaires on the reverse side of this insert.

By doing so, you'll be playing a vital role in Gardner-Webb's four-year self-study toward reaffirmation of accreditation by the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools.

The self-study of the college and its work is a necessary part of the accreditation process, and it gives a valuable insight into how well Gardner-Webb is fulfilling its purposes.

All areas of college life are being examined in the study, directed by Dr. Arthur Nuhrah under the coordination of a steering committee.

Alumni can give a unique view, Dr. Nuhrah says. You are a valuable, major constituency of the college, and can measure its effectiveness in your life from the perspective of your added maturity and experience.

How well did Gardner-Webb prepare you for living and working? Let us know by Nov. 12. Your candid, confidential answers will be sincerely appreciated. (By the way, all college departments welcome your additional comments at any time. Write them directly.)

Records Broken

Records have been flying as the Bulldog football team has posted a record of four wins and two losses in the first six games. Following an opening game loss of 48-0 to undefeated Elon, the Bulldogs came back and won four straight before dropping a 17-0 game to Catawba.

The four wins are the most ever for a Bulldog team since GWC became a senior college. The four-game winning streak is tops and there are several individual records. Rick Chapman, Bulldog punter, booted 13 times against Elon for a new mark and he also kicked 79 yards for a new record against Guilford.

Frank Taylor, Catawba, S.C. running back, reeled 85 yards for a touchdown against Georgetown for a school record and he also rushed for 210 yards against Newberry for a record. Defensively the Bulldogs held Sanford and Guilford scoreless and held their opponents scoreless for 14 quarters.

Gardner-Webb opened the season in Burlington facing a powerful Elon team 48-0. Then Coach Letton and his staff cracked up the Bulldogs and they came out fighting to score a 23-14 upset of Newberry after being down 14-0 at halftime. The Bulldogs then scored two shutouts, 33-0 over Stanford and 7-0 over Guilford. The trip to play Georgetown College in Kentucky was a joyous one and the Bulldogs won 26-6. Catawba took the wind out of the G-W sails as seven term-overs caused the Bulldogs to fall 17-0 in Salisbury.

The Bulldogs' first tournament will be Thanksgiving weekend when they play in the Catawba Invitational in Salisbury, N.C. Teams participating with the Bulldogs will be Catawba, Campbell and Concord, West Virginia. The Bulldogs' first round opponent will be Campbell College.

The next week the Bulldogs travel to Hays, Kansas, to participate in a tournament dedicating Fort Hays College's new $7 million sports arena. Participating in the tournament will be East Central Oklahoma State, Fort Hays and Marymount of Kansas. The Bulldog's opening opponent will be Marymount, a team which went to the national last season and has lost only two regular season games in two years.
