"Forever Special": Graduation Day

Hundreds of people gathered to watch as associate, bachelor, and master's degrees were conferred Saturday, May 15, 1982, upon 273 Gardner-Webb students.

Graduation activities began Friday afternoon with the pinning of 26 nursing students and climaxed Saturday with the conferring of 145 Bachelor of Science, 52 Bachelor of Arts, 30 Associate Arts, and 46 Master of Arts degrees.

Following the traditional Academic Processional and a call to worship, Bernard Parker of Raleigh, Chairman of the Board of Trustees, gave the invocation.

Dr. Ben C. Fisher, the retired Executive Director-Treasurer of the Education Commission of the Southern Baptist Convention delivered the traditional commencement address.

In many ways, this graduation day was not unlike the 71 other May graduations which had preceded it.

But in the processional this year marched the college's first deaf graduates, its first MA candidates, two prestigious scholarship award winners, two citizenship award winners and a scholastic award winner, all of whom made this year's ceremony extraordinary.

The occasion must have held special significance for three of those bachelor degree candidates who demonstrated an extra measure of dedication and determination when they overcame the barriers of physical handicaps to complete their studies at Gardner-Webb College.

The first of those students was Daniel C. Johnson who received a B.A. degree in Social Science with a concentration in History.

While at Gardner-Webb, Daniel served as vice-president of the freshman class and participated in the Social Science Club, Interclub Council, and the Deaf FOCUS Team of the Baptist Student Union. He also received the Language Missions Scholarship, the J.O. Terrell History Award, and was listed in Who's Who in American Colleges and Universities.

In January of 1982, Daniel began an internship with Dr. Jerry Potter, Director of Deaf Ministries of the Baptist State Convention of North Carolina. Upon the completion of his internship, he will attend a Baptist seminary to prepare for a career in deaf ministry.

The second was William K. Stricklen who began his freshman year as the Spirit Leader for his dormitory. And throughout his four years at Gardner-Webb, he was actively involved in the Organizations and institutions, like people, are recognized by the kinds of images they project. Recognition leads to acceptance, acquaintanceship, and friendship. For institutions, friendship leads to membership and support.

How do people project an image? By the way they look. By what they call themselves. By the things for which they stand.

What if people look different (wear different hairstyles or styles of clothing) each time they meet different people? What if people present different names each time they appear before different audiences? What if people voice different opinions in front of different groups, or act differently from the values they profess to hold dear? People who do this may have mixed identities. They have mixed images.

The same can be said for an institution like Gardner-Webb College.

The College campus now has new signs indicating building names. The signs uniformly have a cameo of Gov. O. Max Gardner and Mrs. Fay Webb Gardner, the people for whom we were named. Our name is truly a distinguishing trademark for us. We were named for a governor of North Carolina and his wife. (We may have been one of the first to promote equal rights by giving "Miss Fay" equal billing.)

In the Governor's own words, we are "his choice."

In the months ahead this cameo of the Governor and Mrs. Gardner will increasingly be used to remind the public of WHO we are — our name reflected in their portraits.

The things for which we stand will tell people WHO we are. We believe in the centrality of the Christian faith. The Christian value system will inform all that we do. We are a college of the church.

Cabaniss Named Alumnus Of Year

Joseph E. Cabaniss was named Gardner-Webb College Alumnus of the Year for 1982 at the annual Alumni Banquet Saturday, April 17.

Jack Creech, president of the Alumni Association Board of Directors and presenter of the award praised Cabaniss for his many years of service to his church, community and profession.

"Joe is a proven and experienced business executive who has given freely of himself and his resources to worthwhile causes in his community," Creech said. "I'm extremely proud to know that his college has named him Alumnus of the Year."

Cabaniss is president and chief executive officer of First Federal Savings and Loan Association of Shelby. He has served on the G-W College Advisory Board intermittently over the past 15 years.

He also serves First Baptist Church where he is deacon and a member of the Budget and Finance Committee. He is also associated with the Kings Mountain Association as a member of the executive committee and clerk-treasurer.

In the past, Cabaniss has served his community as president of the Shelby Jaycees, Shelby Kiwanis Club and Shelby Chamber of Commerce. Currently, he is chairman of the Board of Trustees at Cleveland Memorial Hospital.

When asked his reaction to being named Alumnus of the Year for 1982, Cabaniss said modestly, "I am extremely honored. And I suppose I appreciate the award all the more because those who selected me were themselves worthy."

Cabaniss attended Gardner-Webb College from 1941-1943.

Unlike high school seniors today, Cabaniss had no doubts about which college he would attend. He and his family were members of Zion Baptist Church, the oldest Baptist church in Cleveland County and he recalls the strong Christian influence of his childhood which made Gardner-Webb the natural choice for his continued education.

The decision was further confirmed when Governor Gardner set aside scholarship money for deserving local students to attend Gardner-Webb and Cabaniss was one of those early recipients.

Cabaniss has some very vivid recollections about the two years he spent at Gardner-Webb College.

In 1941, the college consisted of the Boiling Springs Baptist Church and one classroom building, the E.B. Hamrick Building. Cabaniss also remembered an old gymnasium of rock-veneer construction and an old dining hall where he and his classmates enjoyed "family-style dinners."

In 1941, Gardner-Webb was a junior college which offered what Cabaniss called "a limited liberal arts education" with no major sports involvement or performing arts programs. The student body was small and about half were ministerial students.

Cabaniss remembers that school spirit was high, despite the continuous draft demands made by World War II. According to Cabaniss, many of the male students were hard-pressed to get deferrals to complete a semester or a year of college work. Ministerial students were often allowed to complete their studies provided they agreed to fulfill their military obligation after college as military chaplains. Cabaniss was fortunate enough to graduate from Gardner-Webb before he entered the United States Army in the spring of 1943 as an infantryman.

When comparing Gardner-Webb of the early 1940's to today, Cabaniss said, "I think that today the student body is a much more cohesive group than we were then. With the new four-year program and all the opportunities for extracurricular activities, today's students have more time to develop lasting friendships and to thoroughly explore career options."

According to Cabaniss, the Baptist church "family" which provides the college sustenance and support has grown since 1941. The "family" now includes 72 member churches in the local Baptist association as well as several churches of other denominations whose members serve the college in various capacities.

"But," he added, "I'm proud of my association with the college because the Church remains the focal point. I still think of Gardner-Webb College as an extension of my local church."

Cabaniss attended Gardner-Webb College, North Carolina State University, and the Savings and Loan Graduate School of Indiana University in Bloomington, Indiana.

He is married to the former Norma Farmer, and they reside at 216 Park Circle in Shelby.

OPEN TO DEBATE

Take yourself back now to the early 1960s and try to identify the faces of these five Gardner-Webb students who debated their way through college.

In the March-April issue of The Web, Larry G. Mosteller of Boonville, N.C., identified all the individuals who were members of the Gardner-Webb basketball team in 1958.

ding was sturdy enough that the building could be rebuilt. However, this was not accomplished for some time because of financial difficulties during the depression era.

Board of Trustees from 1905 until his death. According to the school's history: "Had it not been for E. B. Hamrick... the school surely would have closed. At one time, he marked $4,000 off his books which the college owed him, and for almost one year, he fed the student body free of charge."

HAMRICK BUILDING

E. B. Hamrick Hall is the oldest Building on the campus of Gardner-Webb. The Department of Cultural Resources in Raleigh recognized the building as being significant to the early history of the college and the community of Boiling Springs.

The building completed in 1925, was originally called Memorial Building in honor of the graduates of the school that served in World War I.

Shortly after midnight on November 12, 1937, the Memorial Building was seriously damaged by fire. The interior of the Building was gutted, leaving only the walls standing. It was determined that the portion of the walls still stan-

The restored building was not completed until 1943, with Junius McAllister, a student, as the foreman of the project. Money was raised for the project by the donations of a number of area Baptist churches and individuals, including former Governor O. Max Gardner, who donated $10,000 and Charles and John Dover who matched that donation.

The renovated building was renamed E. B. Hamrick Hall in honor of a Boiling Springs businessman Elijah Hamrick (1858-1946). Mr. Hamrick had contributed generously to the school for many years. Hamrick was a member of a number of school committees and boards and was a member of the

"High Quality"

Committee Evaluates GOAL At Gardner-Webb

A three-member visitation committee of the Southern Association of Schools and Colleges evaluated Gardner-Webb's off-campus GOAL program (Greater Opportunities for Adult Learners) for the first time this past April.

The committee reviewed the overall quality of the off-campus programs as compared to on-campus programs to include: faculty qualifications, curriculum, library resources, and counseling services.

According to Dr. Larry Sale, Dean of Continuing Education, Gardner-Webb has received the committee's preliminary report. There were no formal recommendations and a minimum number of constructive suggestions. Sale said that the college will receive the final written evaluation by the end of the summer.

Sale said that he and the continuing education staff were very pleased with the preliminary report.

"I think that it (the report) indicates the high quality of the contributions and the total effort being made by the continuing ed faculty and the college administration to ensure the success of our Continuing Education Program."

Gardner-Webb College has off-campus GOAL centers in Newton, Charlotte, Lexington, Winston-Salem, Dallas, Statesville, Spindale, Morganton, and Dobson, North Carolina, and in Spartanburg, South Carolina. Off-campus Management Education centers are located at Duke Power's McGuire Plant in Mecklenburg County and at Dover Textiles in Shelby.

Members of the Southern Association visitation committee were: Dr. Warren Nation, a Professor in the Department of Marketing at Florida State University; Dr. Jill McGovern, Chairman and Associate Professor of the Department of Education at the College of Charleston; and Dr. Jack Allen, Associate Executive Director of the Commission on Colleges of the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools in Atlanta, Georgia.

Woman Beside The Man: Beth Parker Williams

By Bonnie Sweeting

It was May 16, 1976, Graduation Day, when Beth Parker Williams first saw Gardner-Webb College. The idyllic setting and the solemnity of the occasion moved her deeply.

But Beth watched the ceremony with mixed emotions.

She knew that her husband's appointment as President of Gardner-Webb College represented the pinnacle of his career, and she was very happy for him. But at the same time, there were fears. She sensed that this job would make unprecedented demands on both of them.

But what eased those initial fears and endeared her to Gardner-Webb that day and in the days to come were the people of Boiling Springs and Shelby.

"They were extremely proud of their college," Beth recalls, "And they had a vested interest in its past, present, and future. So they welcomed us with open arms, like a pastor and his wife starting out in a new church. But, quite naturally, they looked to us for new directions."

So while Craven Williams set upon the difficult task of consolidating a junior college as a four-year, baccalaureate program, Beth sought ways to complement his work and assist a college in transition.

For Beth, the graceful Georgian architecture of the campus was fertile ground to sew the seeds of her special talents. With the eye of a seasoned decorator, but the thrift of a housewife on a budget, Beth used many gifts of furniture and paintings donated by enthusiastic supporters of Gardner-Webb College.

Portraits of past presidents on the second floor walls of the library found new homes on the walls of the Webb Building. Beth personally arranged a gift of lovely antique furniture for the Charles I. Dover Parlor. The task of redecorating Development House on the east end of campus was one of her most challenging and rewarding projects.

"A sense of tradition, fine art and fine furnishings," Beth explains, "are an important part of a liberal arts education. It is our responsibility to see that our students learn about these things firsthand. These are the things that they can be proud of and remember when they are away from the college, as students and alumni."

In keeping with that philosophy, Beth looks forward to the day when the college can seat dinner guests in a formal dining area.

But Beth's contributions have not been limited to interior decorating. She has applied her talents with equal vigor to the grounds of Gardner-Webb College.

Several years ago, Beth planted red geraniums in the beds behind the Webb Building. Today, Beth coordinates the landscaping design for the Kathleen Dover Garden.

"First impressions are so important," Beth explains. "When people visit Gardner-Webb College, they see well-cared-for buildings, freshly cut grass, trim shrubbery, landscaped gardens. All of these things portray the image of 'caring' so important to any college."

Beth credits the Physical Plant staff for their dedication to that caring image.

"It takes staff, faculty, administration, supporters — everyone working together at even the most thankless tasks to achieve an atmosphere conducive to living and learning."

Ever the gentle promoter, Beth adds, "When people ask me how they can make a contribution, I often encourage them to donate china, pieces of art, furniture, a tree — anything like this that will enhance the beauty of Gardner-Webb College."

Beth seeks this same caring atmosphere for every social function held at her Marion Street address or at the college. At 4:30, she adds the last spray of baby's breath to a floral arrangement. At 6:30, she inspects the crystal for water spots. And at 7 p.m., she stands beside Craven Williams as they greet the Trustees, faculty, benefactors, students, and alumni of Gardner-Webb College.

At one time, Beth personally coordinated every tea, luncheon, dinner, and reception, planning each in fine detail from menu to table service.

As an outgrowth of her interest in landscaping and decorating, Beth enrolled in realty at Cleveland

Technical College in the fall of 1980.

Although she completed the 90-hour course requirements and passed the difficult state licensing examination, Beth had not intended to start a career in realty for several years. But when an opportunity presented itself last year with Horne and Story of Shelby, Beth accepted the position and has done quite well her first year, despite the depressed economy.

When asked about her husband's reaction to her new work demands, Beth replies, smiling, "At Mary Baldwin College (a women's college near Charlottesville, Va.), Craven learned firsthand about the problems and frustrations of working women. So he has been extremely supportive of my career efforts. And without his support, I couldn't have managed."

Beth admits that her activities with the college and the demands of her new job may at times be hard on her children. But she says that she and Craven Williams work very hard to maintain a hold on priorities.

Recently daughter Lee's gymnastics recital fell on the evening of the Lutz-Yelton Scholarship Banquet. Beth says that she had "no qualms" about where she would be that evening. And Craven Williams joined her in time to see his daughter perform on the balance beam.

"We have to make a special effort sometimes," says Beth in all honesty. "We try to take weekend trips when we can get away. This winter, we took the children on several skiing excursions."

"And when Craven preaches on Sunday mornings, Jay (their son) often accompanies him. Then we always like to reserve Sunday afternoons for time together as a family."

When asked how she copes with all the demands on her time, Beth confides, "It's tough sometimes. Most husbands' jobs don't demand so much active participation from their wives. And there's still so much to learn about my own job: homes, areas, financing..."

"But," she adds with conviction, "if this career doesn't work, I can let it go. I have never felt that I needed a career to prove myself."

It was May 15, 1982, when Beth Parker Williams shared the pride her husband must have felt at this year's graduation.

But this day, pride was the prevailing emotion.

Beth is a woman who has met the challenges of Gardner-Webb College. She is a woman who now reaches, ever so thoughtfully, beyond the college toward new vistas.

Perspective as well as vision, a rare and wonderful combination.

— all their attention is the Williams' family dog, Megan.

New Position Challenges Crouch

On Saturday, May 15, Dr. William H. Crouch, Jr., was officially named Development Associate for Gardner-Webb College.

As Development Associate, Crouch will be involved with all aspects of the College's development program and will assist the chief development officer in various aspects of the comprehensive development program.

Crouch holds degrees from Wingate College, Wake Forest University, and Southeastern Baptist Theological Seminary; a certificate from Wake Memorial Hospital; and a doctorate from Southeastern Theological Seminary. Most recently, he has been a doctoral student at the University of South Carolina studying higher education administration.

Dr. Crouch is the grandson of Dr. Perry Crouch, former General Secretary-Treasurer of the Baptist State Convention and the son of Dr. W. Henry Crouch, pastor of Providence Baptist Church, Charlotte, N.C.

In making the announcement, President Craven Williams noted that Crouch's familiarity with North Carolina, his commitment to private higher education, and his academic preparation combine to give him unusually high credentials for education administration.

"His internship in the Development Office will introduce him to the people, the skills and the procedures necessary for successful private college administration," Williams stated.

Judith C. Friedel, Assistant to the President, who is currently coordinating the development program and leading the search for the chief development officer, indicated that Crouch will initially be involved with corporation and foundation research methods and proposal preparation, and with estate planning techniques essential for endowment development. Friedel added, "The expansion of the college's endowment program has been established by the Board of Trustees as the major objective for the immediate future. Its development is essential to the long-term security of the college."

Dr. Crouch, the father of four children, is married to Janice Banister Hood.

'68 Graduate Reports

From Gardner-Webb To Red Square

By Bonnie Sweeting

On assignment to cover the Rev. Billy Graham's activities in Moscow last month for WSOC-TV, Channel 9 News, Bruce Bowers and his colleagues had their work cut out for them.

According to Bowers, no one in Moscow was thrilled about the presence of the famous Baptist evangelist or the American newsmen accompanying him.

Bruce Bowers is a 1968 transferred graduate of Gardner-Webb College. He serves today as vice president of the Alumni Association.

"Everything I've ever read about the Soviet Union is true," Bowers said. "It's a repressive state. We met with endless red tape, and often, open hostility from the Soviet people."

Bowers said getting to and from Graham's speaking engagements was difficult, if next to impossible. People on the street were reluctant to give them directions, including the city's cab drivers.

Bowers told of one brave in-tourist driver who took them to their destination but who at first would not accept payment for the service.

The driver finally took the money only after Bowers lowered it behind the seat of the bus out of sight of the ever-present militia.

For Bowers, the incident typified "a sense of intrigue" that hung over Moscow during his visit. Perhaps it was the American "nose for news" that had all of Moscow on edge.

Before the opening session of the peace conference, Bowers opened an old Russian wound when he delivered a live report on the condition of two Russian families, living in the basement of the U.S. Embassy in Moscow, who are unable to leave the country because they have been denied emigration visas.

And, as if adding insult to injury, Bowers hand-delivered letters of appeal from the families to a member of Graham's staff.

"I agreed to do it not knowing if I was compromising myself or even violating Soviet law," Bowers said. "I just did it."

Bowers and the Channel 9 news team aired more Russian dirty laundry when they helped an ABC Bureau chief set up a story with a Russian woman whose husband lives in the United States but the government refuses to let her emigrate.

The newsmen sneaked the woman into an apartment and arranged a telephone conversation with her husband in the United States. While the couple talked for over two hours, the newsmen videotaped their conversation.

Perhaps what the Russian government feared most were new wounds the American newsmen might inflict; concrete evidence of religious repression in Russia.

Bowers found plenty, much of which revolved around Graham's address to the Moscow Baptist Church.

According to Bowers, the Russian government almost canceled Graham's entire agenda when Voice of America broadcast the time he was to speak at the church.

Fearing the church would be inundated with protestors, Soviet officials changed the time of the address, without notice, from 6 p.m. to 8 a.m. the next morning.

Bowers said attendance at the church service was severely restricted. Only those with proper credentials, such as journalists, diplomats and "a few other hand-chosen people" were allowed in.

"And, of course," Bowers added, "the KGB agents."

During Graham's address, a woman unfurled a protest banner inside the church. "The woman was promptly grabbed by plainclothes police, taken away and presumably arrested," Bowers said.

Outside the Moscow Baptist Church, Bowers interviewed an old Russian peasant who told him "in very broken English" that one of his relatives was in prison for practicing his religion (Baptist) in Russia.

Although the old man had traveled a "considerable distance" to hear Graham's address, he was turned away at the doors of the church because he did not have proper credentials.

To practice a religion in the Soviet Union, the Russian people must sign a register declaring their denomination to the state. Those who refuse to register are called "refuseniks."

Bowers said about 30 percent of the Russian population practice some form of religion, despite the official state policy which recognizes only atheism.

According to Bower's notes, there are about 200,000 unregistered Baptists who practice their religion secretly in Russia.

Perhaps the event that embedded itself most firmly in Bower's mind during his trip to Moscow occurred when he returned to the basement of the United States Embassy to dine with the famed Vaschenko family.

Before dinner, daughter Luba described the 22 years of harassment suffered by her friends and family, which included beatings by KGB agents for practicing their religion in Cherdyn, Siberia.

She detailed the 6,000 mile journey to Moscow and the family's bold run for the gates of the embassy and asylum four years ago.

She told Bowers the risks were great, but worth taking. She said she and her family could not live in an "atheistic state" and that everything about Russia was totally incompatible with their religious beliefs.

"A. V. Nolan loved flowers."

Garden: A Widow's Tribute

It started off as a love story. They both loved flowers. She grew azaleas. He grew roses. They married.

She had to leave her precious azalea garden, and because she had to sacrifice her azaleas, he said he would sacrifice his roses, and he chopped down every one.

"I kept asking him," said Mrs. Elizabeth Dudley Nolan, "Why are you chopping down the roses you love?"

"He told me, 'if you have to give up the flowers you love so dearly, then I shouldn't have mine.'"

The Nolans met at First Baptist Church in Shelby, in a training union class. After popping the question time and time again, Mr. A. V. Nolan convinced Elizabeth to say yes. They were married at the age of 58 and 69. Only three short years passed before Mr. Nolan's death.

"I couldn't think of anything more appropriate than to establish a garden at Gardner-Webb College in honor of A. V.," said Mrs. Nolan. "He loved flowers so."

It was in the late 1960's that Mrs. Nolan established the A. V. Nolan Memorial Garden at Gardner-Webb. "A.V. didn't have any close ties with Gardner-Webb; but he was an educator all of his life. He was superintendent of schools in Marion for ten years and taught the sixth grade in Lawndale too. He believed in discipline and working. He demanded a lot from students; and he was a church worker. He was superintendent of all the churches in Cleveland County at one time."

Mrs. Nolan had an azalea garden where her present house sits. "When my mother was sick, I would come out here and take care of my flowers and pray. I called it my prayer garden."

As each spring unfolds, thousands of blooms burst into soft colors in remembrance of Mr. Nolan - a lovely tribute.

Persistence Pays For Martin

In August, 1978, Carl Martin hit the job market armed with a degree in Business Administration, emphasis in computer science, from Gardner-Webb College. But so did thousands of young men and women from other fine colleges all across the nation. Even then, Carl was keenly aware of the competition.

After graduation, Carl tried for several months to land a job in his

"Know the company before you go in. Work hard, be patient, and wait your turn."

— Carl Martin

field. But after each interview, he came up dry until March 5, 1979, when Finance America of Charlotte, offered him a job in collections.

Carl took the job, and for the next year and a half, he worked as a branch representative following up on past due accounts.

"The job wasn't exactly what I had in mind," Carl says now, "but I worked hard and tried to learn all I could about the collections end of the business."

By September, 1980, Finance America began looking for people to develop a new computerized collections system. As a proven insider, Carl had no trouble moving into a programmer position.

Terry Ray, compensation and employment manager in the company's Personnel Department, said that Carl's story is a "prime example" of the value of field experience.

"Carl had the necessary experience in collections plus a degree in data processing," said Ray. He fit the requirements listed on the job bulletin perfectly."

Today Carl lives in Whitehall, Pennsylvania, near the company's home office in Allentown, where he designs software programs for the company's new Impact System, a development management system for use with the IBM 8100.

Carl says, "I'm ninety-nine percent happier with this new job, and I'm not looking to move anytime soon. There are plenty of opportunities here for travel and career advancement."

Last year, Carl returned to Charlotte, to help install the Impact System in that branch, and he recently participated in a seminar in Anaheim, California, sharing with IBM the installation problems and application needs of his company.

Carl says that he had few problems adjusting to life "up North." When he first arrived in Allentown, he joined the company volleyball team in an effort to meet people and get acquainted. He joined the Union Baptist Church and sings in the male choir every Sunday. Carl is also a member of the Youth Concerns Coalition (YCC), a community service organization whose primary aim is to teach Christian education to the youth of Allentown, and the surrounding area.

Carl will be married on June 12,

1982, to a hometown girl, Gloria Adams, of Jonesville, N.C.

When asked the secret of his success in times when competition for jobs is so keen, Carl offers some very sound advice for this year's Gardner-Webb graduates:

"It may be hard to get a job at first," says Carl. "You may have to take one even though it's not in your area until something opens up."

"Just know the company before you go in, work hard, be patient, and wait your turn."

"Oh yes," he adds, "And like my fiance always says, 'Have faith and it will happen'."

Boiling Is Back In Boiling Springs

The effervescent springs on the Gardner-Webb College campus that gave a name to this college town have been little more than a dribble for the last 40 years because of fallen water pressure. Now the springs have begun to bubble — due to a Raleigh geologist, the Z. Smith Reynolds Foundation, and some strategically placed food dye.

The springs' boiling effect was caused by pressure, not temperature, according to Harry LeGrand, a groundwater geologist from Raleigh who restored the bubble.

"I plugged up several outlets in the spring so the water will come out of one outlet with more force," LeGrand said. "I put in some red and green food dye so I could see where the water was coming out."

LeGrand then poured sand into the water and the springs began to "boil" — a roiling flow that formerly shot up water three to four inches above the surface and deposited sand in neat, white cones on the bottom.

Although bubbling springs in the Piedmont are not unusual, LeGrand said, to repair one "is not a common thing." The Cleveland springs is the first he has made to boil, LeGrand said.

LeGrand was asked to examine the waters by Dr. Craven Williams. The springs lie in a small valley on the Gardner-Webb campus under a white arbour. Restoration of the springs was paid from a grant by the Z. Smith Reynolds Foundation to the town and college, Dr. Williams explained.

"It's that light, fine sand that gives the impression of boiling water," Dr. Williams said. It's most magnetic. It makes you want to sit and watch it boil."

Former G-W physician Dr. Wyan Washburn recalls drinking from the springs as a child from "a long-handled gourd dipper" kept hanging by the spring. "It was good and cold and pure and no mineral taste to it," Washburn said.

"It was doing fine until 1939 or '40," Washburn recalled. "The government gave the town money to build a water tank and they bored the wells and the pressure went from the springs to the well."

"That was back during the Depression," Washburn laughed, "and some wags said, 'Times are so hard, even the springs can't run but three days a week'."

Fifth grade economist

What's Happening At Academy

"Fifth graders have to deal with the economy. They can't wait until they are adults to learn how to deal with it," stated Dr. J. Allen Queen, a Gardner-Webb College professor.

Queen has been conducting a series of economic classes at West Cleveland School in Boiling Springs in conjunction with Gardner-Webb College's Broyhill Academy for the Study of Independent Concepts. The students were tested before and after eight sessions on economics.

"We were pleased with the retainment level," Queen said. "It was incredibly good."

The students played the "widget game," which deals with mass production. The game's creator, Dr. John Gretes, UNC-Charlotte, visited each of the classes. The classroom was divided into management and labor, with problem making and solving.

By the end of the four-week course the students were able to comprehend terms such as capitalism, collective bargaining, arbitration, fiscal policy, and inflationary cycle.

Queen hopes that the series will be used as a pattern to be taught throughout North Carolina, and materials for the economics class are being prepared for publication.

A workshop for small business operations was held by the Broyhill Academy and the Shelby Cullum Davis Foundation in connection with the Mount Airy Chamber of Commerce at Surry Community College on May 20.

Lloyd C. Bost, president and treasurer of Bost Bakeries of Shelby, was the featured speaker during the morning session. Bost is a former chairman of the board of trustees of Gardner-Webb College and currently serves on the board. Bost's topic for the workshop was Financial Motivation of Employees.

Other speakers were Monty Venable, of Mount Airy; James N. Smook, senior vice-president of Northwestern Bank, North Wilkesboro; and Mr. and Mrs. Lorne MacLeod of Piedmont Microsystems of Denver. Robert Holder of the Mount Airy Chamber of Commerce coordinated the workshop with Dan Moore, director of the Broyhill Academy.

The Broyhill Academy of Gardner-Webb College was established by the Broyhill Foundation of Lenoir, N.C., and sponsors workshops and lectures on the free enterprise system.

G-W Players Turn Pro

Two Gardner-Webb football players grabbed for the National Football League brass ring this May and June, and at least one of them, defensive back Charlie Harbison (above, left), has the ring firmly in hand.

According to head football coach Tom Moore (above, center), Harbison signed a three year contract with the Buffalo Bills.

While at G-W, Harbison, a four year starter as defensive back, made 135 assisted tackles, 63 solo tackles, and 11 pass interceptions.

The second G-W player, defensive tackle Ralph Warthen (above, right), should be signing with the Washington Redskins. Coach Moore is confident that a contract will be forthcoming since Warthen has spent the summer at the Redskins rookie camp, with the 'skins picking up the tab for all expenses.

In 1981 at G-W, Warthen was credited with 77 solo tackles and 37 assists. He again made the District 26 First Team as well as the Second Team of the SAC-8 Conference.

Eight Awarded For Service

Eight Gardner-Webb College faculty and staff members have earned 15-year service awards.

Receiving pewter trays for 15 or more years of service were: Dr. James Henson, Professor of Psychology; Dr. Bob Lamb, Professor of Religion; Dr. Robert Blackburn, Chairman of the Department of Physical Education and Health Education; Dr. Bill Stowe, Professor of English; Dr. Robert Morgan, Professor of French and Mathematics; Dr. Van Murrell, Chairman of the Department of Religious Studies and Philosophy; Mrs. Joy Sandifer, Reference Librarian; and Mrs. Nellie Hawkins, Secretary to the Director of Physical Plant.

Dr. Henson is a native of Rutherfordton, N.C., and is a graduate of Warren Wilson Jr. College, Appalachian State University, Southeastern Baptist Theological Seminary and Indiana University. Henson is the son of the late Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Henson. He and his wife, the former Dorothy C.

Knowling, have two children, Kathy, 12 and Peter, 10.

was dormitory president during his freshman year and served as a Big Brother during the 1981 Freshman Orientation. He received the Thomasville Lions Club Scholarship and he was also active in the Science Club and the Deaf FOCUS Team of the Baptist Student Union.

"Mac" and Janet Barber, one of Gardner-Webb's student interpreters, will be married on July 31, 1982. They plan to reside in the Morganton area while Janet completes her practice teaching. "Mac" hopes to find a job as a social worker and later attend graduate school.

Gardner-Webb College has been committed to providing a four-year post secondary program for hearing impaired students for the past four years, and on this day in May, that commitment was realized.

MASTERS

The graduation ceremony also held special significance for the 46 students who received Masters of Arts in Education from Gardner-Webb College this year.

After almost ten years of careful planning to meet the expressed needs of area public school teachers for advance study and research in their fields, the college implemented four major graduate-level programs: Early Child Education, Middle School Education, Health and Physical Education and Reading. These programs were designed to accommodate students who held teaching positions in the area, and who lived within commuting distance of the college.

The first graduate students were admitted in the summer of 1979, and this year, for the first time, graduate students crossed the stage for the conferring of degrees.

"We feel very good about the quality of the candidates offered for the MA this year," said Dr. Barbara Burkett, former Director of Graduate Studies. "They were a highly motivated group, and many of them have the ability to go on for doctoral degrees."

The term "highly motivated" is an apt description for one of those MA candidates, Linda Ford Smith of Forest City, N.C.

In 1971, Linda was expecting her first child when she received her first degree, a A.A. in Nursing from Gardner-Webb College. Six years later and expecting her second child, Linda received her second degree, a B.S. in Early Childhood Education. And this extraordinary day in May, Linda received her third degree, A Master of Arts in Education from Gardner-Webb College.

TWO SCHOLARSHIP WINNERS

Paula Dawn Mills was also among the Bachelor of Arts candidates who eagerly awaited her diploma in Religious Education.

But this graduation day was especially exciting for Paula because she had been awarded the "President's Scholarship" of $750 to Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary in Fort Worth, Texas, earlier in the month.

Paula is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Mills of Heritage Place in Mooresville, N.C. While a student at Gardner-Webb, she served as secretary of the senior class, vice-president of the junior class, and treasurer of her freshman and sophomore classes. She also served as Big Sister during her sophomore, junior and senior years at the college. In 1979, Paula was Spring Jubilee Attendant, and in 1981, she was crowned Homecoming Queen.

William Rash, another of the candidates for the Bachelor of Arts in Religious Education, learned in April that he had been awarded the prestigious Raymond Bryan Brown Scholarship at Southeastern Baptist Theological Seminary in Wake Forest, N.C.

The Raymond Bryan Brown Scholarship, is a $1,000 a year scholarship, renewable for three years and is awarded to only ten students entering Southeastern each year.

"Willie" is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Roger R. Rash of Queensgate Lane in Charlotte, N.C. He graduated from West Mecklenburg High School in 1978, and entered Gardner-Webb College in the fall of that year. He was one of nine freshman from across the country who received the coveted "Presidential Scholarship" to Gardner-Webb College. He is a member of the Hillcrest Baptist Church in Charlotte, and has worked with youth groups there.

CITIZENSHIP MEDAL

William Rash distinguished himself again when he was awarded the coveted J. D. Huggins Citizenship Metal, given in memory of the late Professor J. D. Huggins, during this year's graduation.

The award was established by the late L. R. Harrill, State Director of 4-H Clubs, for the best record in general interest in college activities and leadership.

Willie graduated Magna Cum Laude.

"FOREVER SPECIAL"

Nola Renee Boughman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Howard D. Wells of Woodlawn Avenue, Belmont, N.C., received the comparable award for women, the Etta L. Curtis Citizenship Medal, given by Mrs. R.E. Price.

During her four years at Gardner-Webb, Renee was actively involved with the Baptist Student Union and the Deaf FOCUS Team. She graduated Cum Laude with a major in History.

And Cornelia Horne Goode, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Horne and wife of Michael Goode of Riding Street, Spindale, N.C., received the Scholastic Award for a perfect 4.0 academic record at Gardner-Webb College.

Cornelia has been an active member of the Student National Education Association, and completed her student teaching at Cool Springs Elementary School in Forest City, N.C.

She graduated Summa Cum Laude with a major in Intermediate Education with academic concentrations in language arts and science.

Indeed this year's commencement was extraordinary, not only for those who received degrees, but also for the faculty, staff and administration of Gardner-Webb.

The spirit of this special day in May was perhaps best captured by Dr. Craven Williams who said, "Every commencement day is an occasion of special significance; however, when historical "firsts" characterize the day, the significance is enhanced greatly. The May 15, 1982 commencement will forever be special to this college."
