Board Addresses Alumni Issues
Two Alums Look at Journalism
Class Notes

(Editor's Note: Normally in the first spread you find a profile of an individual, a member of the Gardner-Webb family. With this issue, however, comes news of incredible significance. We feel the subject matter is worthy of being explained in great detail. Therefore, a thing, rather than a person, will be profiled in the following pages.)
Mickey Sharpe, GWU director of alumni relations, warned everyone he saw that if they didn't come to campus on Thursday, February 15, they would be left saying to themselves, “I should have been there.”

How right he was.

That night was arguably the most breathtaking in University history, as GWU pulled out all the stops to produce a gala celebration that was complete with the finest food, the most entertaining performers, the most festive atmosphere, and the biggest news the institution has ever unveiled.

Announced amid the evening's food, fellowship and fun was this: Gardner-Webb University has embarked upon a five-year, $20 million campaign to fund facilities, technology and endowment. Even more impressive was the news that $11,199,712 had been committed by the hour of the public announcement that night.

A cheer filled the place and the band played on. “Dreaming, Daring, Doing ... The Campaign for Gardner-Webb University” was officially and publicly announced to the world for all to see, and it had gotten off to a tremendous start.

The whole affair was unlike anything Gardner-Webb had undertaken before, said many of the 650 observers who attended the event. The most obvious characteristic of the evening was how the Paul Porter Arena in the Lutz-Yelton Convocation Center was transformed into the largest banquet facility in Cleveland County with a massive canopy-like tarp that concealed the ceiling, floor, walls, bleachers and backboards to give an elegant and formal feeling to all the guests.

The canopy was the result of a very generous gift from Mrs. Winifred Lindsay of nearby Rutherfordton, N.C. It was announced that the facility, which not only can be set up and taken down with ease but is also available to the community to rent, will now be known as Lindsay Court in honor of the lady who made it possible.

Gerry Vaillancourt, Charlotte Hornets TV studio analyst and Gardner-Webb alum, lit up the night as emcee of a Uriel program that took place halfway through the festivities. A former basketball player for Coach Eddie Holbrook in the 1960s at GWU, Vaillancourt confessed he has never seen his alma mater so alive with activity and excitement as he did on this evening.

In his best “basketball-speak” Vaillancourt told the crowd, “Gardner-Webb is ready to take the big shot. Two seconds left, down by one point and no timeouts left ... and Gardner-Webb wants the ball to take the big shot. Wow. Look around you. Tonight ought to show you that this school is taking the next step toward greatness. What a great slogan for this campaign – Dreaming, Daring, Doing. All three of those words perfectly describe what tonight is all about.”

Fields Young III, a prominent businessman from nearby Shelby, was introduced as National Campaign Chair, a position that provides direction to the campaign, enlists volunteers, and gathers meaningful support from friends and alumni. “I hold Gardner-Webb near and dear to my heart. That's why I agreed to help lead this campaign,” Young told the crowd.

John McCulloch, a longtime GWU trustee, spoke to those in attendance about how he has seen Gardner-Webb mature over the years. He also gave an emotional testimony to the Christian atmosphere he has experienced during his association with the school. “I feel there has been a real prayerful desire (at GWU) to be more than just ‘religious,’ but to balance the spiritual and the academic, and to always be true to that heritage.”

GWU President Dr. Chris White also spoke of the visibility Gardner-Webb is developing in this country. “We do not have all the resources we need ... but, in short, we have quality. And it's quality, not quantity, that moves a college or university to national prominence."

Guests had to know something special was about to take place once they arrived outside the Lutz-Yelton Convocation Center near dusk. In front of the entrance was a four-beam spotlight — similar to those found outside a Hollywood movie premiere — circling and swaying its columns of light far into the sky overhead. When guests looked around inside, they saw an extravagant layout awaiting them.

How extravagant? Adorning the center of Lindsay Court was a six-foot ice sculpture featuring the likenesses of three graduates standing atop a logo of "Dreaming, Daring, Doing." Foods like shrimp and tenderloin were prepared and served by chefs and professional food staff. The richest desserts and sparkling beverages were placed at either end of Lindsay Court. Three stages — one large and two small — featured performing artists that dazzled the crowd with big band, beach music and contemporary selections while magicians, mime, jugglers and balloon artists worked the crowd in comical fashion.

Perhaps most noticeable, however, was a giant video screen at one end of the floor that flashed live footage throughout the evening of guests dancing, entertainers mingling, bands playing and special guests speaking. All eyes remained on the screen during a short formal program that started around 7 p.m. A video produced by the University was shown to the crowd, delivering in dramatic form the goals of the campaign while capturing brilliant campus footage of faculty, staff, buildings and landmarks.

Kickoff organizers also extended the invitation to attend this event to the student body at large. At 8 p.m., a host of young people made their way into the new Lindsay Court through the clusters of balloons at the entrance.

With the sounds of the band coming from the stage, the tastiest of foods spread out before them, and news of a $20 million campaign that would benefit them, no students had anything less than smiles on their faces.

"Wow," a wide-eyed undergrad said to herself as she stood looking around the place. "That's all I can say — Wow."

We couldn't have said it better ourselves.

He Said, She Said

One photographer at the event said he wished he had kept a notebook of the comments he overheard while snapping shots of those in attendance. "I think a lot of folks were somewhat overwhelmed, flabbergasted even, when they saw what was going on and heard the goal of the campaign," he said. "I mean, it's one thing to put on an extravagant party, but also announcing the $20 million thing blew them away."

In the wake of the kickoff celebration and campaign goal, the local newspaper The Shelby Star, wrote, "It's an ambitious step for any university to announce a $20 million capital campaign, but such a project would have once been an insurmountable goal for the Gardner-Webb University. Those days are over."

Students are obviously the group of people who stand to be most affected by the efforts of this campaign. The student body was invited to participate in the campaign kickoff, and apparently that gesture made quite an impression.

Crystal Carson, a junior majoring in communications and psychology, said being invited to partake of the evening’s activities made her think about the scope of the campaign.

"To be honest, in situations like this, we students tend to think that only alumni or friends of the University will be involved," she said. "But we were surprised — pleasantly surprised — to learn that the administration wanted us there."

Gerry Vaillancourt, kickoff emcee, alumna and Charlotte Hornets television studio host — "Everywhere you go now, people will say 'How's it going?' and you'll say 'DDD won't you?' You'll say 'Dreaming, Daring, Doing' won't you? I know I will."

A young man upon greeting one of his professors at the celebration. "Is this for real?"

How Will The Campaign Affect Me?

Hanging out in the Dover Campus Center, one could hear a lot of comments, reactions and questions from faculty and students.

It wasn't difficult to join their conversations, especially if you had an opinion of your own to contribute. The subject? The night before, of course - the kickoff celebration announcing the University's $20 million capital campaign.

The general feeling in these little groups was one of excitement. One student who had not attended the evening's activities, however, said sarcastically, "Hey, how's this campaign gonna affect me?"

Good question. And everyone who heard it offered a response.

"I don't know about you, but the technology deal sounded great to me," said one student. "And it would surprise me if that wasn't the most important thing to the faculty, too."

A faculty member who had chosen not to speak until just the appropriate time, took the last comment as a invitation to shed some light on the topic. You can never speak for the faculty across the board, she said, because everyone has their own private wishes for the scholastic environment they work within. "I don't think it's so much a matter of wanting the technology, but needing it," the professor said. "From a recruiting and competition standpoint, it is a necessity. Students like yourselves are beginning to look through a school's catalogs for the kinds of computer set-ups that are available on a campus. Faculty know the more your school has to offer, the better students it will attract."

Taking a long draw from her coffee cup, the professor added, "But more personally, the younger faculty we're bringing in are expecting the technology offerings to be there for them. Some of us are used to the old way of doing things, and that's fine. But the new folks, they will be attracted to an employment opportunity at a university because of technology the same way students are."

Technology seemed to be the "hot button" in the various conversations. Another student, one preparing to graduate in May, said the technology factor holds endless possibilities for the school. A student like himself, for instance, who is contemplating graduate school could easily be persuaded by a program that would allow for the exchange of information among others around the nation or world who are studying similar subjects.

"And the examples go on and on," he said. "Some people look as Gardner-Webb as being in a little town, isolated from the rest of the world. But with the computer network Gardner-Webb is talking about installing, you would never be isolated. You could share or gain information from anywhere on the planet if you're just sitting at a computer. It's a deep thought, really."

Senior Vice President and Provost Dr. Frank Bonner says that while campus is buzzing with the new prospects the campaign will bring, he hopes the Gardner-Webb family and supporters realize that the nature and the mission of the University won't change when the goal is met. "It's not that Gardner-Webb will become a different place - I hope people aren't expecting that," he explained. "The basics will remain the same, but the campaign will enable us to do what we've always wanted to do: keep pace, remain competitive and go full-force into the new era with confidence."

Meanwhile, the discussion back at the Dover Campus Center churns on.

An instructor thumbing through his mail sees some familiar faces, is apprised of the conversation's topic, and offers his brief commentary.

"I think every person who has ever attended or worked at Gardner-Webb will be affected by this campaign - not for what it will build or buy, but for what it means to achieve the goal," he says with wide eyes and a half-grin. "You see what I'm saying? The campaign is the thing! By just achieving the goal we are sending a message to our publics, our constituents, our supporters and alumni. We will be saying that Gardner-Webb is worthy of support and that people believe in what we're doing."

"Some will read about us reaching the goal some day and not remember a thing about endowments, facilities or computer technology. They will say 'Wow. Gardner-Webb did it!'"
Campaign Nuts and Bolts
What You Need To Know About The Campaign

What does it all mean? Why is Gardner-Webb embarking on a major campaign at this time? What are the concerns the University has about its future?

Gardner-Webb is at an important crossroads in its maturation as an emerging, regional university. Needs are great. And because the University does not accept state or federal assistance in order to maintain its religious principles and operating procedures, those needs are being brought before the friends, alumni and employees of this University for assistance.

The goals are these:

- Endowment – The campaign is seeking $10 million in this area for undergraduate and graduate scholarships, professional and minority assistance. Other endowment needs are for faculty development, including endowed chairs, professorships, lectureships and professional development. Enhanced academic program needs also fall under the endowment heading. The interest earned on invested endowment dollars is what provides the necessary monies for academic aid and attraction of doctoral-level faculty and creation of academic programs that will help us compete in an ever-changing, higher education environment.

- Facilities – By seeking $7 million for facilities, the campaign is addressing the renovation needs of Hamrick Hall, where the School of Business will ultimately be housed. Enhancement of Dover Memorial Library and the science facility on campus are also greatly needed, as well as various renovations and upgrades around campus. The commitment is there to move the School of Business, which enrolls the greatest number of GWU students, into Hamrick Hall. The promise to supply state-of-the-art accommodations, classroom, office and computer laboratory space can only be made if the necessary funds to awaken this historic building are secured. Thousands of former Gardner-Webb students hold Hamrick Hall to be a cornerstone of their college experience. The University wants to allow future students that same great opportunity. With science advancements making news every day, and with massive amounts of information now available to students, the need for updated science and library facilities is paramount. New equipment and modern resources for student enrichment in both areas will also be obtained with the proper assistance.

- Technology – A total of $3 million is being pursued by the campaign for the computerization of campus. By linking all of campus to a common computer network, called WEBBNET, the University can more effectively share information and new advances in technology, thus creating a more efficient working environment and allowing students endless information and resource possibilities.

The first results of the campaign in the technology area are already taking shape. The Dover Memorial Library, at the request of the Board of Trustees in February, currently is being prepared to go “on-line” by securing the proper lines and hook-ups necessary to make the building’s computers and work stations functional on the information superhighway. This is but the first step in an exciting campus-wide project.

When each of our alumni were completing their degrees at Gardner-Webb, they felt absolutely sure that they were getting a comparable and competitive educational experience to other students around the state and the world. However, times and technology are advancing at such a rapid rate, it is easy for an institution to fall behind. To avoid offering anything less than excellence to our current and future students, the University has recognized that the computerization of campus is essential to continue providing an exceptional scholastic experience for all.

As quickly as he arrived, the instructor leaves. His words are sinking in to those in the group he addressed. After a short silence, the conversation is revived. The student who made the earlier sarcastic remark jumps in again.

"Hey, I'm a senior. I'll be outta here before the first dollar is spent," he says, this time in a more serious tone. "So like I said before, How is this whole thing going to affect me?"

Dr. Bonner offers this: "I like what the instructor said about sending a message to everyone out there who has an interest in Gardner-Webb. But let's take that a little further. Maybe that senior won't reap the direct rewards of the campaign. But if this campaign does what it's supposed to do - adding monies and facilities and programs to make this a more prestigious institution - then that young man's diploma hanging on his wall someday is gaining value."

Two students walk away from the group, recanting some of what they've heard. One looks at the other and says matter-of-factly, "Man, you're lucky. You're just a freshman. You have three years to see all this stuff happen."
GWU admissions counselors often tell prospective students that a strength of Gardner-Webb is its location—on the North/South Carolina state line, halfway between Charlotte and Asheville, near the Blue Ridge Mountains, just above the Greenville/Spartanburg (S.C.) area, and three hours northeast of Atlanta.

Atlanta? That's right, now Gardner-Webb can boast of its proximity to Atlanta because on Tuesday, February 27, GWU announced that it would host the 1996 U.S. Women's Olympic Cycling Trials Road Race in Boiling Springs on June 1.

To put that in perspective, consider this: The Road Race held here will be the final women's cycling event before the Olympics in Atlanta, with the results of the 100-kilometer race (approximately 62 miles) serving to determine the final spots on the U.S. Olympic Women's Cycling Team that will represent this country in the summer games. Other women's cycling stages—in West Virginia and Pittsburgh, Penn.—will be held prior to the one in Boiling Springs.

Also consider that the event will be nationally televised. Around 120 of the country's greatest cyclists will make the dash for the finish line, which will be located in front of Noel Hall on Main Street.

At a press conference to make the announcement, the air was filled with anticipation. Business owners in town said they had heard some big news was coming. Several Cleveland County commissioners turned out as well. Boiling Springs officials Max Hamrick and Rick Howell, the mayor and town manager respectively, sat at the head table smiling at the prospects of national attention being cast upon the town of 2,500.

Gardner-Webb said it will officially provide facilities, housing for cyclists, volunteers and organizational assistance to the event and to Medalist Sports which has been contracted to be venue directors. The Town of Boiling Springs has welcomed the opportunity to have the race course pass through its streets and neighborhoods, featuring a finish line on South Main Street in front of the University. Prize money for the event is $10,000.

The Cleveland County location was chosen because of the success, support and organization the area has shown for races such as the Tour DuPont in 1994 and the Carolina State Bank Criterium in uptown Shelby in 1995, when Gardner-Webb accommodated the U.S. National Cycling Team on its campus while members prepared for the event.

Three Gardner-Webb employees—Kevin Jones, Tom English and Mike Roebuck—are avid cyclists themselves who were directly involved in mapping the race course layout and consulting with venue organizers when the area was being discussed as a possible site for the event (see related story next page). Jones has been named Gardner-Webb's event "facilitator," meaning he will coordinate GWU's hands-on involvement with the event. English and Roebuck will lend equal assistance to the logistics efforts as well.

Charlie Rhoden, president of the nearby Shelby Criterium Inc. that organized the aforementioned previous races in the area, explained that the Boiling Springs venue and course route is so desirable because of its similarity to the course that will be featured in the Summer Olympics in Atlanta, including climate, time of event and terrain.

"This is the biggest women's cycling event to ever come to the Carolinas, and we got it," Rhoden exclaimed. "This community should be overwhelmed with joy at what was just announced."

Rhoden also explained that Shelby Criterium Inc. will assist Gardner-Webb with local pre-race planning and organization during the weeks leading up to the event. Those details include coordinating marshals and other volunteers for the race, organizing law enforcement support, and following the procedures for closing town streets and making them safe for cyclists and spectators. Medalist Sports will coordinate activities on a more national and corporate level, including the organization and pre-registration of cyclists as well as the broadcasting of the event on national television and other media outlets.

The path of the race was also unveiled at the announcement, revealing a course that begins and ends in front of the University, proceeds westerly in a half-circle leading to the north of town, passes through a series of turns and short sprints to the east of town, then circles south of Boiling Springs with the riders turning back north in an exciting dash up Main Street to the finish line.

(Please see map on page 8.)

Said GWU President Dr. Chris White, “There has never been a more exciting time to be a part of Gardner-Webb University. First the announcement of a major $20 million campaign, and now the attraction of an Olympic trials event to our campus and our town – it’s magnificent. All eyes are beginning to focus on this institution, and we are developing a strong presence in this part of the country.”

Gardner-Webb and Boiling Springs are hosting one of four trials events in the area between May 30 - June 2. On May 30, men’s and women’s individual time trials will be held in Concord. The Gardner-Webb women’s road race will be held June 1, and the men’s road race will be held June 2 in Charlotte.

The selection process for the 1996 U.S. Olympic Cycling Team will be the result of an athlete’s overall performance in the Olympic Trials, as well as coaches’ selection. Two men and one woman will be automatically selected from points accumulated through the road events, for an Olympic team that will consist of five men and three women. Coaches’ selection will be based on the United States Cycling Federation (USCF) “Principles of Discretion,” which are based on results from the Olympic trials, international competition, teamwork ability and the potential to win medals in Atlanta.

Final Olympic Team selections will be announced on June 2.

Three Of A Kind

Take our word for it – long before the announcement of the women’s Olympic cycling trials was made, the planning for June 1 had already begun.

Three men who relish the opportunity to make this thing happen are Gardner-Webb’s director of athletic training Kevin Jones, financial planning director Mike Roebuck, and Williams Observatory director/assistant professor of physics and astronomy Tom English.

All three confess they probably have a more keen interest in this cycling event than just the national exposure it gives this area. Jones, Roebuck and English all consider the cycling activities they are involved in year-round as more than hobbies.

Jones is being described lately as Gardner-Webb’s “point man” or “facilitator” because he will coordinate the University’s logistics in hosting this event. He is an avid cyclist who is a member of the Board of Directors of nearby Shelby Criterium Committee Inc. that coordinates the now-annual Carolina State Bank Criterium. He has learned preparation, coordination and expertise from other event organizers. He also has made several significant contacts with athletes, coaches and sponsors within the sport over the last several years.

Incidentally, Jones has kept quiet about some great news he discovered recently – he was selected to work several of the Olympic cycling events in Atlanta as a scoring and timing assistant. “With that news and the news of Gardner-Webb being the venue for the road race on June 1, I’ve been very excited for some time now,” he said.

Roebuck is an all-around athlete who has competed regularly in triathlon events nationwide. His exposure to a wide range of courses and events has made his contribution to this project invaluable.

English, also an avid cyclist, has joined Jones in organizing support and assistance for events like the annual criterium in Shelby. He has learned firsthand effective ways to motivate community involvement and, also, has developed a keen interest in devising actual course routes.

In other words, they know the feeling the rider gets when he or she crosses the finish line; they know how it feels to be in an event that is professionally coordinated; they know the reward cyclists get when they train hard for something and succeed.

“I think we can appreciate the subtle aspects of events like these,” Jones explains. “We’ve all been a part of this kind of thing before and we’ve seen what it takes to make events go good – and bad.”

Roebuck adds, “It might be a matter of us just knowing what the cyclists like and expect. We three are feeling like the official cycling link between this event and the University. To us, though, it’s more fun than work.”

English agrees, “We talk with cyclists and teams all year long. It’s probably easier for me and Kevin and Mike to get a sense for what these people expect from an event like this. We’ve also picked up some pointers on how to get stuff done, too.”

Eddie Holbrook, chairman of the GWU committee overseeing the school’s involvement in the event, said simply, “We’d better be thankful we have guys like Kevin, Mike and Tom – they’ve seen what it takes. We’re fortunate to be following their lead.”

TYPE: Road Race
LENGTH: 10.1 Miles
CIRCUITS: 6
Not two weeks after Gardner-Webb announced the blockbuster $20 million campaign, the University dropped another bombshell on the community when it announced its association with the 1996 Summer Olympics in Atlanta. The local papers once again carried the front page stories about yet another Gardner-Webb scoop. And, once again, the coffee shops and classrooms and sidewalks were the stages for public reaction.

What were they saying? See for yourself...

"This is the big time, Cleveland County. When different people heard the news that Gardner-Webb University and Boiling Springs were going to be the host of a U.S. Olympic Trials event in cycling, the reaction was the same. Jaws dropped open and a sense of disbelief crept into the eyes of the listener. Well, it's all true folks." - Alan Ford, sports editor, The Shelby Star

"The race right here in Boiling Springs will carry more pressure with it for the cyclists than the race in Atlanta. That's because this is the absolute final chance for them to make the team, the big show. You people are going to see some fierce competition. You will not be disappointed in seeing America's best riders give their best efforts." - Mike Lepp, Charlotte-area Olympic Organizing Committee member

"How many chances are you going to get to see up close and personal someone who could be the gold-medal winner?" - Steve Nye, executive director, Cleveland County Economic Development Commission

"We need 250 volunteers. There will be a place for you." - Eddie Holbrook, GWU assistant to the president for athletics.

"It's a monumental task and we're going to make every effort. I'm honored and proud we'll be a part of it. When you tell people about this, their faces light up." - Max Hamrick, mayor of Boiling Springs

"I didn't know Gardner-Webb did stuff like this. I figured only the huge state universities got events like this." - Paul Folger, local television anchor/reporter who attended the announcement.

Keeper of the Flame
THE GOOD NEWS JUST KEPT COMING

Gardner-Webb was notified just before the press conference that its association with the 1996 Summer Olympics in Atlanta would be more than just the women's cycling trials event.

Dr. Chris White told the crowd gathered for the announcement that a Gardner-Webb alumnus, Sidney Blake Wilkey '85, had been selected as an official Olympic torch bearer. Wilkey will carry the flame somewhere between its journey from Asheville to Boiling Springs.

Wilkey, who works as a telecommunicator for Cleveland County, lives in Boiling Springs. He said he was anonymously nominated to be a torch bearer based on volunteer work he has done throughout the county.

"I was notified in February and then asked to attend a press conference in Asheville that announced who had been selected. I was thrilled," Wilkey said. "We will soon find out where specifically we will each carry the torch. It's a great honor."

Donned in a special uniform provided to him, Wilkey said he will officially carry the flame about a half mile. He added that the news of the women's cycling event coming to Boiling Springs was a shock. It was even more surprising to hear that the race route that day will pass right by his house.

"Well then," he said excitedly, "I guess I'll just have me a front row seat."
Since We Last Met

A three-month summary of highlights on campus

At The Head Of His Class
VP NATIONALLY RECOGNIZED

Three cheers are in order for one of Gardner-Webb's most popular educators and administrators.

Dr. Gil Blackburn, vice president and dean of academic affairs, was recently selected as one of 25 educators nationwide who have been awarded the Fulbright Commission scholarship by the United States Congress. It is considered the premiere, most prestigious award that an American scholar can receive. ( Whereas the Rhodes Scholarship is given to recent graduates, the Fulbright Scholarship is given to seasoned scholars.)

He is the first person from Gardner-Webb to ever receive the honor.

Blackburn applied for the scholarship from a college/university administrator point of view, writing a lengthy proposal on how his selection as a Fulbright recipient would increase Gardner-Webb's international contacts.

Begun in 1961 and funded by Congress, the honor allows for research abroad and exchanges between scholars from different countries. Blackburn will spend April 13 through May 4 in Germany, where he will travel from Bonn to Eastern and Western Germany and finally to Berlin. After visiting the country's universities, he will spend time with German Parliament members and the highest-ranking cabinet officials for German education.

In true form, Blackburn humbly said, "Well, I'm very pleased I was selected. There are some 3,000 colleges and universities in the U.S. I guess I should feel fortunate to be one of the 25 who was chosen."

Upon his return, Blackburn will address civic clubs, promote foreign exchanges of information and scholars between countries, and help the Gardner-Webb community to understand the cultural and professional differences between the German and American societies.

"I taught German history for 20 years prior to joining administration, but I was always too poor to visit the place," he says with a laugh. "Now I can go and have somebody else pay for it."

More National Recognition
STUDENTS INCLUDED IN HONORS PUBLICATION

Speaking of being at the head of the class, a group of 30 GWU students at the end of December were notified of their inclusion among the nation's finest.

The 1996 edition of Who's Who Among Students In American Universities and Colleges selects an elite group of students from more than 1,800 institutions of higher learning in all 50 states, the District of Columbia, and several foreign nations.

This is the 30th anniversary of the directory, which includes the following names from GWU: JaimalA Amar, Crystal Dawn Baker, Natalie Grace Beam, Julie Ann Blanton, Beth Ann Brackett, Darlene Elise Broadhurst, Kimberly Ann Burris, Clinton Mathew Calhoun, Chasity Darlene Camp, Melody Elise Cannon, Jennifer Elizabeth Carlton, Shawn Lee Childress, Alonzo B. Custer, Tina Marie Duncan, Charles Martin Freeman, Dina Grace Helderman, Sabrina Yvonne Hoffman, Toby James Hopper, Kimberly Dawn Houser, Marsha Elizabeth Ledbetter, Jason Matthew McIntosh, Keith Gordon McKinney, Tracy Lynn Myers, Jerel Anthony Olson, Matthew Gregory Parker, Amy Lynn Reeves, Jason Scott Setzer, Krista Philan Sheppard, Jeremy John Walker, Michelle Leigh Walters.
Promotional Video Unveiled

Because of new features like the World A Resource Center, the School of Divinity can't tell its story solely by word of mouth anymore.

A new video that showcases the facilities, course offerings, faculty, staff and students has been produced through funding from the Broyhill Family Foundation of Lenoir. The video is being distributed to interested persons, churches and organizations who wish to learn more about GWU's divinity program.

Produced and directed by John Brock, vice president for marketing, the videos are available by calling 1-800-619-3761.

South Carolina Baptist Matching Scholarship Established

The bond between South Carolina Southern Baptists and our School of Divinity became stronger a few months ago when a scholarship program was devised for South Carolinians who are preparing for the ministry.

The School of Divinity announced it would match any scholarship offered by a South Carolina Baptist church up to a total of $3,600 by guaranteeing that university-funded assistance will at least equal the amount provided by the church. This can result in a total of $7,200 toward the tuition of any South Carolina Baptist studying at our institution. That represents approximately one-half of the total cost for the three-year Master of Divinity program.

Interested? Call Tracy Jessup, School of Divinity Director of Admissions, at 1-800-619-3761.

Baptists Today's Jack Harwell Meets with President White

The School of Divinity is not only attracting the best students, but it is attracting the most influential and important people as well.

Take, for instance, the recent visit by Jack Harwell, editor of the national publication Baptists Today. Harwell came to Gardner-Webb to have lunch, meet with the president, attend chapel services and take a look around.

Harwell was putting together a feature article that detailed and praised the efforts of the School of Divinity for advancements in graduate-level theological education.

New Leadership

Nine new trustees begin terms

The Board of Trustees, the governing body of Gardner-Webb, has added nine new members. The recent additions began their terms in January and will serve through 1999.

The new leaders are Neal Alexander, Dr. Ralph Bentley, Grady Duncan, H.S. Keeter, James Seagraves, Eloise Spangler, Ralph Spangler, Dr. Tom Warren, and the Rev. Dale B. Watts.

- Alexander serves on the Student Affairs Committee for the Board. He is general manager, OE Services, Duke Power Company. He lives in Lincolnton with his wife, Shirley.
- Bentley serves on the Development Committee. He is a pediatrician in Statesville where he lives with his wife, Caroline.
- Duncan serves on the Financial Affairs Committee as well as the Executive Committee. He is retired as vice president for finance with Wix Filters, a division of Dana Corporation. He and his wife, Je, live in Belmont.
- Keeter is a Development Committee member. He is president of Keeter Motors Inc. of Shelby. He and his wife, Sandra, live in Shelby.

The University also extends its deepest sympathy to the Garland Bolejack family in Mr. Bolejack's recent death. He served as trustee beginning in 1995 and was a member of the Student Affairs Committee. A valued and personable member of the Gardner-Webb family, he will be greatly missed. Our thoughts and prayers are with his wife, April, and the entire Bolejack family.

Music To Our Ears
FINE ARTS BENEFITS FROM COMPANY DONATION

The Selmer Music Company and Express Music Company of Spartanburg, S.C., have renewed an agreement with Gardner-Webb to provide the University with approximately $50,000 worth of new musical instruments for the Fine Arts Department.

Selmer first arranged this contribution in 1995, with 80 band and orchestra instruments donated for a year's use. With the renewal of this agreement, Selmer has provided all-new equipment for GWU to use this year. This particular arrangement that Selmer has negotiated is for the University to use the instruments for a period of time, then a local music dealer will sell them as "demonstrators" so to speak. The instruments are sold at discounted prices.

The University is pleased to once again benefit from Selmer's program. A sample of the type of instruments being provided include numerous Bundy flutes, clarinets, alto sax, tenor sax, oboes and trumpets. Also provided are Bach trombones and French horns; Glaesel violins, violas and cellos; and Ludwig percussion kits.

Faculty Gets Graded
STUDY PRAISES GWU

A national study of colleges and universities conducted by a Connecticut firm revealed Gardner-Webb University as the only North Carolina university whose strongest and most recognized characteristic is its faculty.

The study, which was completed by the communications and research firm Collegiate Information Services, asked guidance counselors from across the United States to rate 800 schools nationwide on features that are considered most important to high school students. Of the 23 North Carolina colleges and universities asked to be rated, only Gardner-Webb was mentioned in reference to the personal attention its professors and instructors gave to students.

In addition to Gardner-Webb, other North Carolina schools included in the survey were UNC-Chapel Hill, N.C. State, Duke, Wake Forest, Campbell, Davidson, UNC-Charlotte, Appalachian State, Barton, East Carolina, Elizabeth City State, Elon, Guilford, Johnson C. Smith, Lenoir-Rhyne, Mars Hill, Meredith, N.C. Central, Salem, UNC-Asheville, UNC-Greensboro and UNC-Wilmington.

Duke, N.C. State, UNC-Chapel Hill and UNC-Charlotte were singled out for their academic programs. Other characteristics guidance counselors could have selected as an institution's key strength included leadership opportunities, good for job after graduation, financial aid opportunities, social life and athletic programs. Several schools such as Campbell, Elon, Guilford and Meredith College were perceived most for campus safety.

GWU President Dr. Chris White said the university was not aware the study was being done, but that he was extremely pleased when notified of the results. "If I could have picked one characteristic for Gardner-Webb to be most identified with, it would be our faculty," he said. "It's very reassuring to know that many of the nation's high school students and counselors recognize us for our quality of instruction."

Library Addition
SHRINERS DONATE BOOK

Recently three members of the Piedmont Shriners Shrine Club – Chapter President Don Conn, First Vice President Ron Saunders, and Board of Directors member Dusty Haynes – visited the Dover Memorial Library to make a donation.

The gentlemen presented a copy of 1895-1995: The Centennial History of Oasis Temple, 100 Years of Shrinedom in the Carolinas to library director Valerie Parry. The book covers the extensive philanthropic activities of the Shriners Hospitals, which provide no-cost hospital care to children with burns or orthopedic problems.

Currently, 55 children from Cleveland County are being treated at Shriners orthopedic facilities.

Honor Society Begun
RELIGION STUDENTS, FACULTY INDUCTED RECENTLY

A new religion honor society has formed at Gardner-Webb with membership that includes five students, the faculty of the Department of Religious and GWU President Dr. Chris White.

Called Theta Alpha Kappa, the honor society held its first induction in 1995 and subsequent inductions will occur each fall. Dr. Jack Partain founded the Gardner-Webb chapter and he serves as moderator. Dr. Larry Gregg co-sponsors the group with Dr. Partain.

Student members are at least juniors in standing, have a minimal GPA of 3.5 in religious study coursework (consisting of Introduction to Old and New Testaments and 12 additional hours of religious studies), rank in the upper 35 percent of their class, and be invited by the National Society. Maintaining this level of excellence is also expected of all members.

Goals set aside for the group include meeting three times per semester for theological readings, conferences and fellowship in addition to attending national meetings. The national society also publishes a journal featuring chapter members' writings. This is a great opportunity for students who might not otherwise have avenues for publication.

They've Got Us Covered

NOTABLE PUBLICATIONS FEATURE GWU ON COVERS

The people who study, work and teach at Gardner-Webb are often explaining the fine features of the University to those they encounter each day. Without a doubt, word is spreading of the exciting events that have taken place on campus recently.

The proof? Two publications that reach a significant number of people in the Baptist community featured Gardner-Webb on their covers for all to see. The Biblical Recorder here in North Carolina and The Southern Baptist Educator in Tennessee both recognized that the University is currently enjoying the most notably progressive time in its history.

A beautiful shot of Noel Hall, the home of the School of Divinity, is shown on the covers with news inside each issue of increased enrollments and record-breaking campaigns.

The Educator cover was for the month of January and the Recorder cover was for the week of February 24.

10 Great Things About Gardner-Webb

- THE ARCH. Although it's been moved from generation to generation to all parts of campus, it is still one of the most recognizable landmarks at GWU.
- THE STEPS OF HAMRICK HALL. Students still embrace it as a place to enjoy lunch, a chat, or a group photo for a club on campus.
- WILLIAMS OBSERVATORY. The next closest university to go to for a view like this is Appalachian State.
- STROUP DORM LOBBY. The decor hasn't changed in 30 years and neither has the comfy atmosphere.
- SPANGLER STADIUM. Did you know a North Carolina magazine recently named it as one of the top five places in the state to take in a football game?
- THE ROSE GARDEN. It doesn't seem to change a bit through each of the four seasons.
- THE STEEPLE OF DOVER CHAPEL. It rises above the trees in all directions, the cross telling everyone of Gardner-Webb's mission as a university.
- THE BANNERS IN PAUL PORTER ARENA. The retired jerseys of Artis Gilmore, John Drew, Eddie Lee Wilkins and George Adams look peacefully into the eyes of the NAIA National Championship Golf flag.
- LAKE HOLLIFIELD. When the orange light of dusk plays on the water, there isn't a more relaxing sight on campus.
- THE ANNUAL FESTIVAL OF LIGHTS CELEBRATION. Whether it's a capacity crowd joining the sing-along in Dover Theatre or the luminaries beside the walkways afterward, the atmosphere always warms the heart.

Spring Roars In

March and April are those fickle months in Boiling Springs when springtime is trying its hardest to muscle its way into every day but winter just won’t seem to turn loose. Thus, you get days that are 80 degrees and sunny followed by days that are 50 degrees and dreary.

Students, it seems, become impatient with the whole transition. After several months of biting wind and electric blankets, the first warm day of the new year is seized as somewhat of a momentous occasion.

Isn’t it amazing how sunshine and mild temperatures can change your outlook on things?
About Face

WOMEN'S basketball program SOARS TO A NEW LEVEL

Eddie McCurley took over a women's basketball program that was 8-19 a year ago and posted a 20-win season this year.

His team finished 22-7, second place in the South Atlantic Conference. He notched wins over three nationally ranked squads, flirted with national rankings himself, and — the icing on the cake — received the University's first-ever invitation to post-season play as a member of NCAA Division II. Although the ladies fell in the first round to Wingate 84-78, the season was still one to remember.

"The ladies really responded well this season; they picked things up quickly and were able to do what we asked of them," said McCurley. "Their efforts have not been a surprise but the results have been."

Open Letter To Teammates

Dear Former Gardner-Webb Teammate:

Thirty-seven years ago this spring (1959) we were teammates on the Gardner-Webb College baseball team that compiled a 19-1 won/loss record. Dean Jones, whom I haven't seen since those days, called me several weeks ago and in our conversation he stated, "Wouldn't it be great for us to have a reunion?"

I've been thinking about Dean's comments since; and I, too, think it would be wonderful to see everyone again after so many years. The biggest problem is trying to locate the whereabouts of all the guys. I have contacted Ozzie McFarland, GWU Athletic Director, and he graciously agreed to assist any way that he could. The purpose of this letter is to ask for your help in locating as many team members as possible.

I have obtained some mailing addresses. However, they may have changed by now. If an address can be confirmed or you can help locate someone, I would be grateful. The names of team members who we need to find are listed here.

If things come together I would very much like to schedule a reunion some time this year. Again your assistance and early response is very much appreciated.

Flexing Their Muscle

The Gardner-Webb Runnin' Bulldog wrestling team had an impressive outing at the NCAA Division II regional meet, finishing fourth as a team and qualifying two wrestlers for the NCAA Division II National Tournament.

Chris Austin won the 142 lb. division to earn a spot at the nationals and Zeke Allen earned a wild card national berth. Gary Eller was selected as an alternate at 134 lbs. Austin finished the year with a 22-5 won/loss record, while Allen finished at 21-6 and Eller at 21-7.

Turner Becomes GWU's 11th All-American

The GWU men's basketball program received some exciting news recently, as star forward Robbie Turner was named to the Second Annual Sports Information Division II All-American third team.

The 6-3 senior from Gaithersburg, MD, led the South Atlantic Conference in scoring with 22.6 points per game and was named first team All-Conference. Despite constant double teaming, Turner broke the South Atlantic Conference career scoring average mark and finished fourth in the conference record books with 587 season points.

The Runnin' Bulldogs went on to post a 15-12 record and a third place finish in the South Atlantic Conference.

"I'm extremely pleased with Robbie's selection," said Coach Rick Scruggs. "He's a great kid that shouldered a lot of pressure as the team's only senior. Robbie has been a true leader on and off the court and I couldn't be happier for him."
Arnold Isaacs '57 knows what it's like to have people counting on him—people like every single fan of the Charlotte Hornets and Carolina Panthers. That's because as president of F.N. Thompson Co. in Charlotte, he has managed the construction of arguably the two most popular sporting venues in the state.

That's correct, the Charlotte Coliseum was in a GWU grad's hands and the Carolina Panthers stadium, scheduled to be completed in 3 to 4 months, is also his responsibility. As the head of a general contracting company, pressures to complete a project on time and on budget are just part of the business. However, when there's hundreds of thousands fans waiting to see their favorite team play, and an owner expecting to see a finished product before the upcoming season, the word "pressure" takes on a different meaning.

"Well, it's pretty much like building anything else," Isaacs says, taking a moment to put his job in perspective, "except that you're having to account for about 1,300,000 square feet of heated and cooled space in and around the various parts of the stadium."

Like building anything else, huh? Consider that the 1.3 million sq. ft. of space he's referring to is about as much as the NationsBank tower in Charlotte, the tallest building in the Southeast. Isaacs admits it could be thought of as a "mammoth project" but it's something he has become accustomed to, having secured jobs to soon begin construction on a $50 million entertainment complex in Fayetteville (N.C.) and $100 million worth of law enforcement facilities in Mecklenburg County.

A three-sport athlete at Gardner-Webb—while on scholarship he played baseball, football and basketball—Isaacs went on to star at Western Carolina where he played against, of all people, Jerry Richardson, then a player at Wofford College and now owner of the Carolina Panthers.

"It's kind of funny how things come full circle, don't you think?" Isaacs says chuckling. "Really, I think in my business, like anything else in life, you just have to be in the right place at the right time."

Isaacs' philosophy for his success recognizes that timing is but one part of the equation. A reasonable amount of intelligence, he says, and the determination to work hard will also help you get places.

He adds that he considers himself lucky. That's because he chose a profession where you can actually see the results of hard work, and know that it will stand for all to see for a long period of time.

"When it's all said and done, it's very satisfying to be able to step back and look at what you've helped accomplish," he says. "And it makes you feel good when someone like Jerry Richardson tells you he could have selected any number of people to build his stadium, but he chose you because you're fair and honest and you do what you promise."

Larry G. Honeycutt, Director of Communications for Gardner-Webb.

Robert Decker recently took over managing editor duties nearby at The Shelby Star. But as someone accustomed to being the reporter, she says the new job is taking some time to get used to. "My hours were flexible ...," she says. "Now I spend anywhere from 10 to 12 hours a day in office supervising newsroom operations. I never imagined my phone could ring as much as it does."

As the Star's first female editor, she says it is obvious people are paying very close attention to her. Also consider that she is making the transition from a peer to those in the newsroom to being the boss, which obviously can make life difficult at times. "Luckily," she jokes, "I tend to thrive in stressful situations."

Taking on this new position has definitely changed the way she views her career, she concludes. "Certainly becoming editor of a daily newspaper has always been one of my goals. I just never counted on achieving this one at such a young age."
Remember when the Class of 1946 was in full swing!

In 1946 the students of Gardner-Webb College learned a lot about life from The Porthole, the student handbook. Advice and regulations were just a few pages away on subjects ranging from initiation day for freshmen to extending a line of credit (that was a no-no) at the Snack Shop.

- A sample of the rules of dating:
  "Girls have to sign out in the Dean of Women's office before 6:00. Be sure each blank is filled out clearly because it has to be approved before you leave. You have the privilege of attending campus church with your date on Sunday night and afterwards dating until 10:00. (You may also attend prayer meeting with your date.)"

- How about the section entitled "For Your Pleasure:"
  "Radio: it takes away that homesick feeling."
  "Roller Skates: healthful exercise and enjoyment at the same time."
  "Camera: to take snaps of your newly acquired friends for your memory book."

- Tips on how to remember your 'bringing up'
  "Don’t gripe about the food! You will find the food sufficiently adequate. You don’t like beans and potatoes? Well, we do have beans and potatoes sometimes, but you will be sure to have a balanced diet while at college."

Beginning on October 4 with a golf tournament and ending with a buffet dinner at 6 p.m. on October 5, Homecoming will provide a weekend full of excitement and memories. Included in the festivities is the 50th reunion of the class of 1946 with special emphasis on the football team of 1946-47 - the first post-war football team.
