GWU Centennial: 1905-2005

PRESIDENT'S UPDATE

Refreshed by the holidays, we boldly look at 2004

TO THE GARDNER-WEBB FAMILY,

Greetings from our beautiful campus. It is my sincere hope that each and every one of you have enjoyed a fulfilling and inspiring holiday season. We at Gardner-Webb could not feel more blessed about what the Lord has accomplished at our institution.

A new year brings with it new expectations, goals and commitments. Let me begin by saying that I am committed to you and this university. I believe so strongly in what Gardner-Webb stands for that I have agreed to extend my stay at GWU until 2005 (see more information on page 6). It is my hope, and the hope of the trustees, that during this time I can lend my time and efforts to several projects and items of business.

Foremost on my mind is helping the newly appointed presidential search committee to begin its work (see related story on page 6). Finding the right person to lead Gardner-Webb in the coming years will be no easy task. But it will most certainly be an exciting one. This university has turned the corner and is headed in a most positive manner toward great programmatic and physical advancements. I have served with committees such as these before, and I can say truthfully that any candidates will view the GWU president's position as one to behold. I am excited for what the future holds at Gardner-Webb.

I also want very much to see this institution through the impending NCAA decisions that should come to conclusion in 2004. My pledge to you is that we will face the challenges posed to us in a straightforward manner and we will come through this time in our history as a better and stronger body of educators and supporters.

The leadership we have in place for this university is capable and willing to work hard to improve our standing as providers of outstanding Christian higher education. Recent changes in the university relations and enrollment management divisions will strengthen our efforts (see pages 6 and 7 for more information).

We have already seen that students continue to view us as an institution where learning of distinction takes place, as over 3,800 undergraduate, graduate and doctoral students joined us for the '03-'04 academic year (see page 7). Record numbers like those are a testimony to those of you who support and encourage this institution in so many ways.

And perhaps most significantly, accrediting agencies and our peers who observe us have endorsed our university and its offerings with their highest recommendations (for more information, see pages 4-5). Consider the recent affirmations of our nursing and music programs, not to mention our athletic training educational program – these are programs of which you can be proud.

They are symbolic of the constant quest for excellence that all of our faculty, staff, students and programs strive for.

A sign that an institution is healthy and progressive is the willingness to take on new projects. Excitement was certainly in the air this fall when we broke ground on a new stadium complex (see page 7). From our educators to our students, from our alumni to our community members, all have begun to see that this facility is much more than a place to play – it will serve as a solution to much-needed office space, provide additional classroom space and begin a domino effect across campus that will allow academic and athletic programs alike an opportunity to expand their operational and recreational opportunities.

But aside from bricks and mortar, the true essence of Gardner-Webb as an inspirational and intellectual haven has shown through as well.

Continuously helping students and the community in the examination of their faith, GWU has embraced academic and spiritual issues in events like the Right To Die Symposium (see page 8 for details). I am thrilled that our school does much more than simply offer degrees, but rather it educates and ministers to the whole person.

Our students are testimony to that. Consider the group of young ladies on our campus who would graciously sacrifice for those who have cancer. Take the time to learn about the “Locks of Love” program that these students participated in and you’ll be sure to be encouraged about the future of our college and our nation (see page 10 for this heartwarming story).

Another great example of the true essence of Gardner-Webb is Derek Lane (page 11). Not one to be limited by his physical handicaps, Derek inspires our campus community daily with his drive to succeed and his love of music. Take a moment to realize just how rarely we witness this type of character in our world today. GWU is developing leaders, but more importantly it is developing upstanding members of society who will make a positive impact on others wherever they go.

But perhaps there is no greater testimony to the life and spirit of Gardner-Webb than the alumni who are so connected with us.

Homecoming 2003 (pages 14-15) showed us that, and as I walked around the campus and the ballgames and the events of that weekend, I was warmed with the thought that Gardner-Webb is as strong as ever.

If you doubt that, take a look in the alumni section at the outstanding people who call Gardner-Webb their alma mater (see pages 16-19). From Marty Montague to Andy Hanner and all of the distinguished alumni award recipients, you and I can be proud that Gardner-Webb has a mighty presence in communities near and far.

So as we cherish the holiday season that has passed, and as we look boldly into the new year, let us hold our heads high. Adversity tests our faith, says the Bible. It should cause us to realize that apart from God we can do nothing. I firmly believe that Gardner-Webb University has placed its faith in God Almighty to lead, guide and direct us.

Please enjoy this issue of The Web. In it you will be glad you are a part of something as special as this university. And should you have comments, suggestions or input about any topic on your mind, I encourage you to contact me or my staff.

Sincerely,

Frank R. Campbell

The Value of Accreditation

What Does It Mean To Our University?

Accreditation brings value to a degree, but just how does it bring that value to you as an alumnus, a student or friend of the university?

PROGRAM ACCREDITATION

Accreditation can be defined as the assurance that the accredited entity provides a standards of excellence in the curriculum, quality faculty, adequate facilities and equipment that are expected for success in their field. Through this assurance, employers can know the education a graduate received is of quality and meets certain standards. Potential students can know they will receive an education of value. Graduates can be assured they are prepared to sit for testing measures required in their fields for certifications, as well as be prepared to enter advanced educational degree programs.

Dr. Dee Hunt, GWU professor of health and physical education, worked through the process of gaining NCATE accreditation for the School of Education program in 1995. She also assisted the faculty in Athletic Training in its recent accreditation process. "Accreditation brings greater visibility (to the program), affirms that you do what you say you do, gives means to meet criteria for advanced education and confirms academic integrity." Hunt adds that accreditation shows a commitment from the university to the continuation of the program.

The types of accreditation vary among areas of speciality such as Athletic Training, Nursing, Education and Fine Arts, to name a few. But the need for accreditation, and the benefit to the university as a whole including students, faculty and alumni, are similar.

With programs such as athletic training, the accreditation is essential to the student's career success because they need the accreditation to meet prerequisites for professional examination. The same is true in the Fine Arts field where accreditation gives graduates an advantage when pursuing advanced degrees and is required by most school boards and certification agencies, as well as helping musicians gain positions of prestige in the performance arena.

As defined by Paluma Services, an independent service providing online information for career advancement,

"Accreditation assures the general public that accredited schools are focused on student achievement, and on providing an efficient, effective and enriching learning environment. Accreditation extends across state lines, assuring students, parents and the public that a given school adheres to high quality standards based on the latest research and successful professional practice. Educators gain access to a network of schools within their region for the sharing of best practices and professional knowledge. Through the accreditation process educators at all levels can achieve deserved recognition for demonstrating their ongoing commitment to quality."

Accreditation Spotlight: Athletic Training

The Commission on Accreditation of Allied Health Education Programs (CAAHEP) has granted initial accreditation for the maximum five years to the GWU Athletic Training Educational Program, which has been a major at GWU since 1996.

Athletic training is one of the most rigorous academic programs offered at GWU, requiring students to complete a variety of courses in the Physical Education, Wellness and Sports Studies (PEWSS) department in which the program is housed, and also in other departments such as biology. Extensive clinical education follows coursework and then graduates must pass a national board examination in order to practice in athletic training-related careers. In light of new educational reforms to this field of study, graduates from a non-accredited program would not be allowed to take the national board exam, said Ashley White, GWU program director for the athletic training educational program.

A four-year self-study began

the accreditation process, said Kevin Jones, GWU director of athletic training. Site visits followed from a subcommittee of the accrediting body. After an extensive review of documentation, facilities and personnel, the subcommittee then recommended to CAAHEP to grant GWU's program its initial accreditation.

Jones underscores not only the value that accreditation brings to the program, but the luxury the university enjoys to < Dr. Frank Bonner, GWU provost and a veteran of 21 regional accrediting committees.

Accreditation can mean class size is regulated as well. Gardner-Webb's ratio of students to teachers in the Athletic Training Educational Program is 4:1, well within the requirement, and a more efficient ratio than similar programs at other universities.

REGIONAL ACCREDITATION

On a larger scale, "regional" accreditation is granted to institutions as a whole, as opposed to the accreditation of specific programs within the university, according to Dr. Frank Bonner, GWU provost and a 21-time member of regional accrediting committees for The Southern Association of Colleges and Schools (SACS), which is the body that accredits Gardner-Webb as an institution. SACS is one of six U.S. regional accrediting bodies for colleges and universities as recognized by the Council for Higher Education Accreditation (CHEA).

"Accreditation talk can get complicated for those who do not live and breathe it every day," said Bonner. "But to put it simply, Gardner-Webb has to be accredited to (a) allow its students to receive federal financial aid, (b) to allow students to get into graduate schools, and (c) for the public recognition that comes with meeting a certain level of standards and quality."

He explained also that while institutional accreditation is vital, not all programs within a university are required to have program accreditation, although certain state mandates for accreditation are placed on programs like education and nursing, among others.

"We're happy that at Gardner-Webb, we are secure with our mandatory accreditations, and we're even pursuing the idea of optional accreditations in some of our programs."

He concluded, "It's like seeing a doctor who is board certified. It makes you feel better about the quality of the product."

(Editor's Note: GWU accreditations include the Commission on Accreditation of Allied Health Education Programs (CAAHEP), the North Carolina Department of Public Education, the National Council for Accreditation of Teacher Education (NCATE), the National Association of Schools of Music (NASM), the National League for Nursing (NLN), the North Carolina Board of Nursing, and the Association of Theological Schools (ATS).

provide clinical training alongside classroom learning. Students majoring in athletic training, he said, can practice their skills by partnering with the GWU athletic department to treat student-athletes under the supervision of licensed and certified athletic trainers.

"And, we've taken even more steps to further the learning possibilities for our students," said Jones. "Affiliations with the four Cleveland County high schools give students additional avenues for practice, as well as partnerships with Miller Orthopedic and Cleveland Physical Therapy Associates."

Jones added that good news will continue for the program when GWU's new stadium complex is completed next year. Approximately 3,000 square feet of space will be dedicated to the practice of athletic training, meeting and office facilities.

Accreditation Spotlight: Fine Arts

The Fine Arts Department has received notification from the National Association of Schools of Music (NASM) of the re-accreditation of the bachelor of arts in music.

In addition, three new programs received final approval for accreditation, including the bachelor of music in composition, bachelor of music in music education and bachelor of music in sacred music. NASM writes, "The Commission commends the music unit for the excellence of its work and accomplishments ..."

According to Dr. Patricia Sparti, chair of the Department of Fine Arts, "The NASM seal stands for a well-rounded, quality education in music, and most employers look for that. Also, every major music executive in the country is a NASM member, and so there are many connections in the music industry."

She added, "This accreditation guarantees a quality music education and guarantees that our students will be taught all the competencies of a rigorous music education."

Accreditation for the Fine Arts programs also means better opportunity for career success, whether choosing to pursue a masters degree in music or seeking work in the music field. "Most graduate schools require a bachelor's degree from a NASM-accredited institution. And, most school board and certification agencies require a degree from a NASM-accredited institution," says Sparti.

According to Sparti the guidelines for meeting NASM accreditation standards include "performance and technical skills requisite for artistic self-expression in at least one major performance area at the level appropriate for the particular music concentration, the ability to read at sight with fluency, rehearsal and conducting skills, keyboard competency and ensemble experience that is wide and varied." There are other requirements in the area of eartraining, music history, composition, improvisation and technology. Each degree also has specific standards.

With the recent accreditation, the O. Max Gardner building underwent renovations, adding a state-of-the-art music lab, recording studios and multi-media music classrooms. New musical instruments have been added and the music library updated.

Sparti exclaimed, "We offer a degree of distinction! It is our students' entry into the world of beautiful music and a career of their calling for the glory of God."

SINCE WE LAST MET

PRESIDENT'S CONTRACT EXTENDED TO '05

At its October meeting, the Gardner-Webb Board of Trustees voted unanimously to extend the contract of Dr. Frank Campbell as president through June 30, 2005. Campbell has served the university since October 31, 2002, when he came to Gardner-Webb as interim president after retiring from Averett University in Danville, Va.

In announcing the contract extension, Board Chair Neal Alexander cited Dr. Campbell's successful first year and the need for continuity and stability as primary factors for the decision. In addition, Dr. Campbell is providing crucial input and leadership in the search process for a permanent president, according to Alexander.

In other news from the October meeting, the GWU trustees voted to keep all current officers of the board in their positions for another year. Therefore, Neal Alexander will remain as chair for the 2004 calendar, Sam McMahon will continue as vice chair, Frank Beam remains as treasurer, and H.S. Keeter Jr. will return as secretary.

SEARCH MEMBERS NAMED

The final members of a search committee to find GWU's next president have been named, according to Neal Alexander, chair of the GWU Board of Trustees.

The final members selected to the presidential search committee were representatives of the Gardner-Webb faculty and student body. Dr. Janet Land, associate professor of English, and Dr. Tom Jones, professor of biology, were selected from among the 141 full-time faculty members at the university. Ms. Kellie Robinson, vice president of the Student Government Association, will represent the student body on the committee.

GWU trustee Frank Beam of Shelby, NC will serve as chair of the committee, and trustee Lisa Tucker of Concord, NC, will serve as vice chair.

Other trustees selected to the committee are Dr. John E. Roberts of Greenville, SC, Dr. C. Lorance (Rance)

Henderson of Morganton, NC, and Thomas E. (Tom) Philson of Charlotte. Neal Alexander will serve as an ex-officio member of the committee but will retain voting privileges. Rounding out the committee and representing the university's administration is Dr. Frank Campbell, who has served as president for GWU since October 2002.

The search committee will begin its work in early 2004.

"Having announced that Dr. Campbell will continue to lead us until June 2005, the trustees have given the committee ample time to carefully work through the search process," Alexander added.

"Identifying the proper candidate to be the eleventh president of Gardner-Webb University is a daunting task."

ADMINISTRATORS SETTLE INTO NEW POSITIONS

President Dr. Frank Campbell announced in the fall that Dr. Jack Buchanan has been appointed vice president for enrollment management, which oversees all undergraduate, graduate and doctoral program recruiting and admissions functions of the institution. The appointment was effective November 1.

Employed at Gardner-Webb since 2000, Dr. Buchanan replaces Ralph W. "Scoot" Dixon as the head of the GWU admissions effort. Dixon in September assumed the role of vice president for university relations and development at GWU. He had since continued as head of enrollment management until a replacement could be named.

This is Dixon's second term in the University Relations head position. He held that post from 1989-1996 before becoming executive director of the NC Baptist Foundation.

STADIUM PROJECT UNDERWAY

At left: Administrators, students, trustees and others gathered on October 11 to break ground on the new stadium complex project, which not only will alleviate space constraints on athletic and academic offices campuswide but will expand the physical resources for many of the athletic teams. At top: By December, the current visitors side of the stadium was being transformed to become the home side. Administrators plan for the complex to be complete by August.

GWU School of Divinity. In 2001 he also assumed the role of director of the Doctor of Ministry (D.Min.) program within the School of Divinity. In addition he holds the rank of assistant professor of pastoral ministries.

In light of these transitions, Dr. Danny West was named Buchanan's successor as director of the D.Min program.

ENROLLMENT TOPS 3,800 IN THE FALL

GWU announced that its Fall 2003 enrollment figures met expectations and exceeded last year's numbers.

More than 3,850 undergraduate, graduate and doctoral students were participating in classes by late September.

Noteworthy enrollment increases occurred in such programs as the undergraduate day program, the Graduate Program, the Doctor of Ministry (D.Min.) program, the Graduate School of Business, and the "GWU at Statesville" campus.

Dr. Frank Campbell said in a memo to campus: "Despite challenges, we have pulled together to bring in an outstanding class of students who desire to live, grow and learn at Gardner-Webb. I applaud your efforts."

Additions such as the Doctor of Education program, as well as a recent announcement that GWU trustees have approved short-term and long-term physical improvements to campus, have created a renewed sense of excitement and anticipation for the 2003-2004 academic year, Campbell said.

LILLY AWARDS GWU ADDITIONAL GRANT

Lilly Endowment Inc., of Indianapolis, IN, announced in December that a $150,000 "sustainability grant" was awarded to Gardner-Webb to continue a program that was created with a $1.254 million initial grant from Lilly Endowment in 2001.

The new grant, which is part of Lilly's "Theological Programs for High School Youth Sustainability" effort, was given to allow GWU the opportunity to develop its own funding for the program that was begun in 2001. The Ministerial Vocation Program for Youth is administered through the School of Divinity.

The establishment of the Ministerial Vocation Program for Youth at Gardner-Webb is part of a movement to address the issue of diminishing numbers of qualified ministers worldwide. The hope is that youth would be engaged in serious theological discussions at an earlier age, thus allowing them to more easily discern the call to ministry and make plans for educational and ministerial preparation.

Symposium Focuses on the Right to Die Debate

"It keeps coming around with the same core of arguments and points to be considered medically, legally and ethically."

"It is an issue whose time has come," states Dr. Paul Simmons of the University of Louisville's School of Medicine (ULSM) during the Right to Die forum held at Gardner-Webb in the fall. "The debate is not new. It keeps coming around with the same core of arguments and points to be considered medically, legally and ethically. Only the players and places seem to change, not the fundamental debate."

This first forum in what is to be a series offered at Gardner-Webb University, brought Dr. Simmons and two Gardner-Webb professors, Dr. Kent Blevins, professor of ethics, and Dr. Doug Dickens, professor of pastoral counseling in the M. Christopher White School of Divinity, to discuss an issue over which Christians fall on both sides.

Simmons, also an adjunct professor in the Department of Philosophy at ULSM, teaches courses in Medical Ethics, Business Ethics, Philosophical Ethics and Human Rights. He has served as professor of Christian Ethics at The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary and director of the Clarence Jordan Center for Christian Ethical Concerns.

The symposium was not a debate but rather a time to reflect on differing views and to challenge the audience to consider their own. Simmons began the dialogue with an overview of viewpoints and opinions surrounding the right to die debate, sharing his views along the way.

Varying topics covered included withdrawal of treatment, assisted suicide, natural death without resuscitation efforts and technologically maintained vital signs. A time for dialogue with the audience followed.

Simmons gave the audience examples to consider, including a physician who was resuscitated 96 times during which time he continually begged his colleagues to let him go.

During his examples, Simmons referenced King Saul's choice on dying in I Samuel 31:4. The historic scene culminated with Saul having his companion kill him with the sword instead of allowing a more dishonorable death to come upon him.

"Love may accept my death and allow me to die. It does not insist I remain 'alive' simply because it is a technological possibility," challenges Simmons.

Blevins discussed the changes that have taken place in the dying process in America. Deaths that used to take place at home surrounded by family and the familiar are more often occurring in public institutions surrounded by strangers. Today, according to Blevins, more than 72 percent of Americans die in public institutions.

Dickens shared, "I don't ever want to be a living cadaver." He did say, however, that he wanted the support of community. "To be in the image of God is to be in community."

THEATER TACKLES DEBATE IN DRAMATIC FASION

The Gardner-Webb Theater presented an original play entitled "Dogfall" written by Scot Lahaie, GWU director of theater, which explores the right to die debate that has engaged the American court system over the last two decades.

"Dogfall" is also the inaugural production in Gardner-Webb's new Playwrights' Workshop—an initiative in bringing new plays to the stage. Each fall, the theater program at Gardner-Webb plans to produce an original full-length play never before seen on the stage. "Although this year's workshop features one of my own plays," comments Lahaie, "we hope in future years to bring a working playwright to campus to facilitate rewrites and development. The focus of the workshop is not on the finished product so much as on development. We explore the script—rewriting and cutting as needed—as we bring it to the stage."

The cast of "Dogfall" was limited to three actors. Matt Winning (a junior theater major) played the role of Mike Howard, a self-described patriot from the extreme political right. Karl Mosbacher (a sophomore) played Jake McKenzie, a physician committed to assisting his terminally ill patients with their suicides. The conflict in the play arises from the political divide separating these characters. According to Lahaie, the "dialectical structure of the play exposes the nasty underbelly of both arguments—from the left and the right—thereby forcing us as an audience to seek compromise in the center."

Mary Leila Erwin (junior theater major) played the role of the elderly neighbor.

Dr. Janet Land:

"My path is a long and winding one."

The English Department has stepped somewhat into the limelight recently as three English program alumni received recognition and induction into the Gallery of Distinguished Graduates this fall (see page 18), and Dr. Janet Land, chair of the English Department, was named to the newly formed presidential search committee.

What is on the mind of our English Department chair and newly appointed search committee member? All things academic - teaching, editing, learning and the future leadership of GWU.

Dr. Land has held the position of department chair of the English Department since the fall of 2002, having taught at Gardner-Webb since 1994. She specializes in 19th century British Literature.

"My path is a long and winding one," says Land of her journey that brought her to Gardner-Webb. While she had an interest in teaching before graduating high school, she was encouraged to pursue interior design by her high school guidance counselor. After obtaining a bachelor's degree in interior design, Land worked in the insurance field before continuing her education.

Now with a doctorate from the University of South Carolina at Columbia, Land teaches nine class hours while overseeing the administrative responsibilities of the Department. Land made her way to GWU after teaching at Lander University and Midland Technical College (SC).

She also has been working on a manuscript based the dissertation she completed on Samuel T. Coleridge when obtaining her doctorate in 1993. She hopes to have the work published. Land expresses that it is a love of learning that energizes her. "While I enjoy the research as part of my role as a scholar, I am always excited to pass it on." The process of learning and taking that information to her classroom is perhaps her greatest pleasure, she adds.

In the summer of 2002, Land taught a five-week summer session in North Hampshire, England, and was able to spend a week in Italy as part of the summer program. Travel is one of her hobbies, and she enjoys combining it with her passion for learning. She also enjoys online games, which she plays with her two grown sons.

Turning her attention to the new presidential search committee, which will begin meeting in early 2004, Dr. Land spoke on being chosen as one of the faculty representatives. "I'm honored my colleagues think well enough of me to give me this responsibility," she says, adding that she hopes the next president will be someone with an education background who doesn't micromanage and encourages input from the faculty. Land is one of two faculty members who will serve on the committee. The other is Dr. Tom Jones, professor of biology.

Dr. Janet Land is one of two faculty members who will help identify GWU's next president.

New Faculty

The 2003-2004 academic year began with 15 new faculty members from various locales and backgrounds. They include:

- Ms. Rose L. Bailey, assistant professor of business law and accounting.
- Dr. Benjamin C. Brooks, assistant professor of chemistry.
- Dr. Daniel E. Goodman, associate professor of New Testament.
- Mr. L. Scot Lahaie, assistant professor of theater arts and theater director.
- Dr. Ute S. Lahaie, associate professor of German.
- Ms. Kathy W. Lindsey, instructor in nursing.
- Dr. Hongwu "Sam" Ouyang, assistant professor of international business and strategy.
- Dr. Victoria "Vicky" F. Ratchford, assistant professor of education.
- Ms. Nancy H. Scroggs, assistant professor of nursing.
- Dr. David W. Shellman, assistant professor of education.
- Dr. Laura W. Smith, associate professor of psychology and counseling.
- Dr. Edwin B. Stepp, assistant professor of religious studies and philosophy.
- Dr. Theresia A. Wansi, assistant professor of financial economics and management information systems.
- Ms. Vickie G. Walker, instructor in nursing.
- Ms. Linda M. Wines, instructor in nursing.

NURSING NEWS

• Troy McCurry, B.S.N., R.N. is the first male faculty member of the School of Nursing. McCurry began teaching as an adjunct staff member in Fall 2003. He serves as the clinical instructor, working with student nurses and conducting hands-on training in the labs on campus.

McCurry graduated from Gardner-Webb with his A.D.N. in 1987, and B.S.N. degree in 2002. Dr. Shirley Toney, dean of the School of Nursing, said of McCurry, "He is a very sincere and very caring faculty member, and I'm delighted he's here. He's providing good experience."

McCurry has experience as a PRN staff nurse in critical care with Gaston Memorial Hospital, in ICU/CCU at Upstate Carolina Medical Center and as director of ICU/CCU and PICU at Upstate Carolina Medical Center, and has worked in their emergency department. He has also worked as nurse manager/quality improvement specialist and home health nurse with Interim Healthcare, IV Therapy Nurse with Spartanburg Regional Medical Center and charge nurse at same.

• The School of Nursing has announced that the GWU Nursing Honor Society has been approved as an at-large member of the Mu Psi Chapter of Sigma Theta Tau, the international honor society for nursing. The School will be joining with the Mu Psi Chapter at Queens University in Charlotte. A highly favorable recommendation was received this past summer, based on the application and on-site visit. The formal induction ceremony occurs January 18, 2004. Baccalaureate and Master's students and graduates and community members who are eligible will be invited to join.

A GIFT GIVEN WITH

“LOCKS OF LOVE”

Trends on college campuses vary greatly from one campus to another, from one decade to another. This trend, however, has really caught the attention of many. At the time this article is written, there were eight in the Gardner-Webb family who are or have participated in Locks of Love, including students (one male) and two staff members.

by Kaylin Bowers, “Locks of Love” participant
Gardner-Webb students have extreme compassion for those in need. There are many events that Gardner-Webb students choose to participate in. Some give blood, some walk for life, others donate hair.

“Locks of Love” is an organization where students can donate their hair to help make wigs for young girls undergoing cancer treatments. It’s natural hair (the patient) can curl and play with it like any other little girl.

Many young ladies on the Gardner-Webb campus have realized how precious long hair is to little girls, and also, how easily it grows back. “Hair is something girls take for granted,” said Pamela Darnell, a junior. “It’s a luxury, an extra thing to play with and, to a little girl with cancer, that means a lot.”

Each donor has a story behind why they are donating their hair. Darnell’s inspiration was her friends. “You [continue to] live life like normal and that inspired me to do it. You just sit here and let your hair grow,” she said. Darnell donated 10 inches of her hair after Christmas break for the first time.

Julie Lineberger read about Locks of Love in a magazine article and thought it a perfect way for girls to “make someone’s life a little easier.” She also met another hair donor who knew a girl with cancer. “Talking to them made me think that I have and have always had long hair,” said Lineberger. “I thought about being sick and not having hair and that being an added stress to life.” Lineberger is currently in the process of growing her hair out to give again. Lineberger gave 11 inches of hair in May 2002.

Another student, Chelsea Simon has donated her hair and plans to do so again. Simon gave 15 inches in memory of her grandmother who had died of cancer the year before her donation in 2001. Now, she’s growing her hair out to donate again.

All three girls, and many others on campus, think donating to Locks of Love is a good cause “because cancer is hard for anyone and losing hair is hard, especially for kids,” said Simon. Locks of Love is probably one of the easiest donations people can make. “It doesn’t cost you anything, really,” said Simon.

Lineberger would also encourage others to think through the decision to donate because “it is a very personal way to help someone,” she said. To find out more about Locks of Love, visit www.locksoflove.org.

“Hair is something girls take for granted,” said Pamela Darnell, a junior. “It’s a luxury, an extra thing to play with and, to a little girl with cancer, that means a lot.”

“It doesn’t cost you anything, really.”

A Handicap? That's Not The Way Derek Lane Sees It

GWU Sophomore Labels His Blindness A "Mere Inconvenience"

by Kaylin Bowers, student

GWU Sophomore Derek Lane does not consider his blindness a handicap. In fact, this communications major only considers it a "mere inconvenience." Said Lane, who was born blind, "Ultimately, I would love to work with radio productions, doing sound effects and voiceovers."

This past summer, Lane did audio work for his church during the services. Music has been a large part of Lane's life since he was young. He began taking piano lessons at the age of five and now sings for the Gardner-Webb Concert Choir.

However, Lane learns the music somewhat differently from everyone else. Since he cannot see, he must have his music translated into Braille. There are Braille codes for music notes, said Lane, but he does not know them very well. He has the words to the songs put in Braille and bound together for him by the Noel House on campus.

During performances, the Concert Choir is allowed to have music available to them, but Lane typically memorizes the song, keeping the words handy as a back-up.

Since he only has the words translated into Braille for him, he listens carefully to the parts around him in order to learn the song's tune. And he receives a tape of the music with just his part on it, which helps him to learn the songs more quickly.

"Obviously, one hindering aspect of blindness is that I cannot sight-read," said Lane. "Some people are really good and can pick up music and start playing or singing just from sight-reading."

Lane either has to wait until the music is put into Braille or have someone read him the words. Lane calls such difficulties "minor annoyances."

No matter how many annoyances life gives, music remains a part of Lane's life. "He is so talented," said Maggie Koon, a junior who sings with Lane in the choir. "It's got to be difficult. He has such a passion for music and it is more than just singing. It is for music as a whole, even keyboards."

To Lane, his blindness is not a handicap. "A handicap is something that you start out with and it gets worse," said Lane. "If you were born in a certain state, it has never existed, therefore it's not a handicap." Lane has overcome many of the difficulties blindness may cause and has learned to enjoy life - and music - the way it is.

SENIOR

"Oh, the Places, You'll Go" by Dr. Seuss was the celebratory theme of this year's Senior Pinning Banquet and Ceremony held this fall during Family Weekend. Fun decorations combined with moments of reflection on the seniors' success and upcoming graduation created endearing memories.

Those in attendance included honored seniors, guests, faculty and staff, which totaled more than 500 people. GOAL seniors represented half of those seniors honored.

Several speakers made up the evening program including: President Dr. Frank Campbell, alumnus Larry Durham, and various staff, faculty and students.

Emily Poplin, a GOAL program senior, spoke about how Gardner-Webb has made a bachelor's degree accessible to her.

Student Gets One Of 10 National Scholarships

Kathryn Phillips, a GWU senior, has received the prestigious Nolle scholarship from the Alpha Chi honor society. Alpha Chi is a national honor society for college juniors and seniors.

Alpha Chi promotes academic excellence and exemplary character among college students and honors those who achieve such distinction. As a general honor society, Alpha Chi admits to membership students from all academic disciplines. Membership in Alpha Chi is an honor limited to the top 10 percent of the junior and senior classes.

Alpha Chi gives 10 Nolle scholarships of $1,500 per year to seniors across the nation based on the submission of a 20-page paper. Phillips presented her work at the national Alpha Chi conference in Washington, D.C., based on research she had completed the previous summer on Parkinson's Disease in Chicago.

Her research pursued the use of gene therapy techniques to treat the actual causes of Parkinson's Disease. Most treatments currently used deal with the symptoms. The research looks to address the regeneration of the neurons.

Phillips is a chemistry major and English minor. She has applied to medical school and is considering general practice, incorporating research into her practice.

"One of the things I would like to do is overseas mission trips to bring medical care to people who don't normally have it," says Phillips. She has pursued an English minor to strengthen her passion for writings and has had a few of her poems published.

BULLDOG

FOOTBALL PROGRAM TAKES HOME SECOND STRAIGHT CONFERENCE TITLE

Gardner-Webb ran to a 29-0 halftime lead, and kept the pressure on in the second half for a 46-0 homecoming win over Charleston Southern, wrapping up the Bulldogs' second-straight Big South Conference championship.

GWU ran its home winning streak to 14 games with the victory (the Dogs would make it 15 straight with a win the following week against Florida International), and kept its Big South record unblemished, dominating the game from start to finish. The Bulldogs registered 370 yards of total offense, despite beginning seven of its drives inside Charleston Southern territory. The win also secured Gardner-Webb's seventh-straight winning season, and was the 50th win of head coach Steve Patton's tenure in Boiling Springs. Patton's total mark at GWU now stands at 51-24.

The football team celebrates another Big South championship as quarterback Nick Roberts hoists the conference trophy among his teammates.

Awards, Honors Pour In

Senior football players Chris Foster and Jim Maxwell were named first-team CoSIDA Academic All-District III in the University Division, which includes all Division I-A and I-AA schools in North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida and Virginia.

The selections mark the first time in Gardner-Webb football history that two teammates have earned first-team CoSIDA (CoSIDA (College Sports Information Directors of America) Academic All-District honors in the same season.

• Junior football player Mario Williams was named Big South Defensive Player of the Year for the second year in a row Monday, and head coach Steve Patton earned his second straight Coach of the Year award as the Bulldogs placed 20 players on the 2003 All-Conference squad. Linebacker Jim Maxwell was named Co-Scholar Athlete of the Year by the league, sharing the honor with VMI kicker Matt Sharpe.

In two seasons, the Bulldogs have seen 40 student-athletes earn All-Big South honors in football.

• Football standouts Mario Williams and Graham Whitlock earned spots on the second major I-AA All-America Team, as each was named second-team All-America by The Associated Press. The selections mark the second and third time GWU players have been named to the Associated Press' I-AA All-America Team

• GWU's Todd Ulrich was named to the Academic All-America Men's Soccer University Division Third Team by the College Sports Information Directors of America. Ulrich, a senior from Shillington, Pa., carries a grade point average of 3.969 and is majoring in finance. The four-year defensive starter earned his way onto the All-America ballot by being named to the Academic All-District III First Team on Nov. 6.

An Academic All-Conference selection in 2002, Ulrich becomes Gardner-Webb's first men's soccer Academic All-American since Robert Daniel in 1997.

• Sergio Lozano, Carlitos Ramirez and Tyler Kettering all earned postseason men's soccer honors from the Atlantic Sun Conference. Lozano and Ramirez were named to the All-Conference Second Team, while Kettering was voted to the All-Freshmen Team.

• GWU soccer players Liz Kier and Lindsey Gladhill both earned spots on the North Carolina Collegiate Sports Information Association University Division Women's Soccer All-State team.

HOMECOMING 2003

On the weekend of November 7th - 9th, Gardner-Webb celebrated Homecoming 2003, bringing alumni, families and fans to enjoy countless activities.

Homecoming 2003 will be remembered for its smiles and rekindled friendships. In addition to the traditional powder-puff game, homecoming parade and alumni awards, were a new offering of reunion gatherings that brought alumni and classmates together once again.

"This year's homecoming embodied the theme, 'There's No Place Like Home' for many of our alumni," said Lou Ann Gilliam, director of alumni relations. "Alumni gatherings such as the 90s social offered a unique opportunity for folks to reconnect with former classmates and professors. At the 'Quarter of a Century Gathering' classes of '75 through '80 gathered on Saturday afternoon during the game peering through old annuals and reminiscing over twenty-five years of memories."

On the same weekend, GWU played host to approximately 1,100-1,200 youth soccer players as teams participated in the The Chevrolet Recreation Cup's Western Regional playoffs, sponsored by the North Carolina Soccer Association and in conjunction with the Greater Cleveland County Soccer Association

... there really was no place like home!

(GCCSA).

The November 7-9 weekend brought one of the largest numbers of people to campus since the 1996 Olympic Cycling Trials, when approximately 10,000 people converged on campus.

With the GCCSA event, Gardner-Webb was involved not only in providing field space and other facilities, but also in parking manpower, security, the preparation of the fields, and sharing of resources.

GWU has been the home for the GCCSA since spring of 1996. Along with GWU athletics and academic programs, the GCCSA will also benefit with greater office space from the new stadium renovations, scheduled for completion in 2004.

Another group enjoyed the Gardner-Webb campus on Homecoming weekend. Royal Ambassadors/Girls in Action Day was sponsored by the Office of Admissions. Church groups from Cleveland County and surrounding areas participated in this segment of Homecoming Weekend.

"Munchkin Land" with its inflatable games and face painting was a big hit with the kids as well as the parents. Classmates were able to catch up with one another as their kids experienced the giant slide, moon bounce and face painting.

Reaching Out To Children Across the Globe

"The potential for positive influence on a child, their family and possibly even their country is enormous. Who knows what kind of role this child may play in the future leadership of their country?"

- Marty Montague

Marvin is one of 15 children who came to America for the first time, rode a plane for the first time and got medical care he couldn't get in the circumstances surrounding him in his native home. All the children who visit America through Global Children Outreach come to receive some type of medical assistance. Marvin came for eye surgery to remove a growth that was impairing his vision. He will likely return through Global Children Outreach for additional surgery.

Global Children Outreach is an organization that connects churches and families with children, primarily from foreign countries, who have needs that cannot be met in their present circumstances. It is hoped that by having families, with support from their church, host the children, that bonds will be formed to help share the message of God's love in addition to caring for the medical needs of the children. A camp gathering of all the children is part of the program that teaches hygiene and the message of God's love mixed with games and fun.

Gardner-Webb alumnus, Marty Montague '94 B.A., was one of the three founders for Global Children Outreach, with a passion to help children in need. Her passion is to help children who do not have the opportunity for adequate care, medically and spiritually, in their circumstances. "We link children who have needs with churches who have resources," says Montague.

The summer of 2003, brought children from Ecuador, Moldova and South Dakota, most experiencing the same firsts as Marvin, though with differing medical reasons for

GARDNER-WEBB UNIVERSITY

Honor Roll of Donors

2002-2003

is a special opportunity for Gardner-Webb University to recognize those who have supported the institution through the sharing of their resources.

Gifts made to GWU over the last year have helped to further place the university among the elite colleges and universities in the Southeast and the nation. Great strides have been made to offer additional scholarship assistance, expanded and modern facilities, and increased offerings on the undergraduate, graduate and doctoral levels. Without the support of these donors, Gardner-Webb would not be the institution to which students worldwide come to learn and grow.

he Honor Roll gives special recognition to those who have given $1,000 or more to the university in the 2002-2003 academic year. These donors gain membership into the University Club as a result of their giving level. University Club donors are described as having caught the vision of the institution, embraced it, and have given of themselves to see it realized.

Yuri is an older child who also came in the summer of 2003. His situation is another example of the kind of medical assistance needs that bring these children to America through Global Children Outreach. He had open heart surgery at the age of four and had recently received a diagnosis that would require a second open heart surgery. Doctors in his country of residence are paid by the government based on the procedures they perform, therefore not relying on the patients' funds for services rendered. Yuri's parents questioned his need for surgery. He was brought to America to confirm the need for the second surgery.

Doctor's in America confirmed Yuri's parents' suspicions that no surgery was necessary. He was diagnosed in America as healthy.

Marty Montague has traveled extensively and travels often to locate the children in need and make necessary arrangements. Churches donate funds to cover the children's sponsorship fees which provides for their transportation to America. Volunteer families undergo a screening process and training to host a child during their stay in America. Montague works with a team of volunteers, a board of directors and one full-time staff member to coordinate the program.

Medical services are donated by hospitals, individual physicians or clinics. Volunteers are trained in caring for the children during their stay and in communicating with the children once they return home. It is hoped that the Christian home environment, as well as the opportunity for medical care, will show the children God's love in a tangible way.

Global Children Outreach can be reached at 704-566-0740 or by e-mail at gco11@bellsouth.net.

Hanner Integrates Faith With Smart Business Sense

The Three Rivers Center for Behavioral Health Organization has emerged from behind closing doors to thrive under the guidance of president and C.E.O. Andy Hanner '86 B.S.

Three Rivers offers inpatient, residential and outpatient services to adolescents, adults and seniors for psychiatric and substance abuse related illnesses, and is one of the largest providers of this type in the Carolinas, located in West Columbia, S.C.

In 2000, Charter Behavioral Health Organization, the parent company for Three Rivers (then Charter Rivers), declared bankruptcy, leaving the facility to close its doors or find a new financial backer.

According to Hanner, "It was about pursuing a higher calling rather than just moving on to another job." Hanner took on the challenge to keep the doors of Three Rivers open to serve those in need.

Three Rivers is now thriving: more beds have been added with and plans to expand again in 2004. Three Rivers has expanded their market in North Carolina and the staff is in negotiations to acquire another hospital. Plans have been drawn to add a four story office building at Three Rivers 20 acre campus as well. They also provide home-based academic programming for school age residents.

"Faith certainly plays an integral role in helping to bring healing to the patient and family," says Hanner. When asked how his own faith works through the organization he states, "it is a thread that weaves its way down thru the company."

Hanner participated in a summer missions program for three years while a student at Gardner-Webb. "It was a rewarding experience," says Hanner, who remembers wanting to help those in need, especially the mentally ill. Hanner studied psychology with a religion minor at GWU.

Some of Hanner's fondest memories of his days as a student at Gardner-Webb is a promotion carried out by a local restaurant, the Qwik Snack, "A cheeseburger and tea for $2.03," and late night pontificating with the guys about Dietrich Bonhoeffer and others.

After graduation, Hanner pursued serving indigent families in New York City before getting a master's degree in social work and theology from The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary. Hanner then went to New Orleans where he worked as a case worker. That position led to a new position managing the mental illness treatment program at the city's hospitals.

Hanner now also serves as the treasurer for the National Association of Social Workers in S.C. He has a wife, daughter and son.

Gallery of Distinguished Graduates

2003 Award Winners

Gardner-Webb University established the Gallery of Distinguished Graduates to recognize and honor alumni who have made outstanding contributions in their fields of service and in the communities in which they serve. Every year, alumni are selected from nominations by their peers and the Gardner-Webb community.

Bridging the Gap Between Students and Alumni

Written by photojournalism student Lee Adams

A simple phone call can bridge the gap between alumni and students, between need and a diploma.

Twice per year director of annual giving, Cassie Bridgeman, begins Gardner-Webb University's Phone-a-thon in an effort to raise money for the Gardner-Webb Fund (GWF). The GWF supports student scholarships, with every dollar being raised going directly toward student's financial needs.

Ninety percent of students at Gardner-Webb receive some type of financial aid, so Bridgeman uses students to do the fundraising. "Most of our student callers receive financial aid, so it is quite meaningful for them to see where their scholarship money comes from," says Bridgeman. All funds raised through phone-a-thon are unrestricted dollars, meaning that they are eligible to go toward a Gardner-Webb student who may have a need, not just ones meeting certain criteria.

About 40 students are hired per year to make phone calls to GWU alumni and friends in an effort to raise money. Not only do the student callers learn where their support is coming from, but they are paid minimum wage for their time worked and given all the candy and softdrinks they can handle.

Bridgeman wants prospective givers to know that the road goes both ways. Not only are students asking for gifts, but alumni and friends can get information they may find useful as well. Often during a call Bridgeman will end up gathering information for an alumnus or prospective student. "On several occasions I've e-mailed someone because their grandson wanted an admissions packet." And that is what sets phone-a-thoners apart from typical telemarketers.

Monogram Day

Alumni who have participated in athletics at Gardner-Webb were invited back to campus for Monogram Day in October of 2003. This was the first of what is to be an annual event. If you participated in athletics while at Gardner-Webb, and would like to be included in next year's mailing list, please call 704-406-3327 or e-mail klukridge@gardner-webb.edu.

School of Divinity Alumni Association Established

Late professor Dr. Donald E. Cook honored

A gathering of School of Divinity graduates in October brought alumni from the earliest group of graduates from the program in 1996 to the most recent 2003 graduates back to the Boiling Springs campus.

Also attending were former and current School of Divinity faculty. Alumnus Lin Carter '99 emceed the gathering, Dr. Sheri Adams gave an update on what has progressed, changed and been added in the life of the School of Divinity. Bruce Rabon, associate vice president for development, then led the group in a dialogue about forming a School of Divinity Alumni Association.

All in attendance were in favor of making the gathering a continuing tradition, "I felt like I was at a school reunion. I can't wait until our next gathering," said Carter.

A special time of remembrance was given for former Distinguished Professor of New Testament Interpretation, Dr. Donald E. Cook, who passed away in the fall of 2001. Mrs. Kaye Cook was given a plaque in appreciation for the dedicated years of service Dr. Cook gave the School of Divinity in its formative years. The newly formed School of Divinity Alumni Association pledged to support the Donald E. and Kaye A. Cook Christian Service Organization Scholarship.

"The formation of the Alumni Association is yet another milestone in the growth and development of the School of Divinity," said Carter. "Everyone I spoke with was thrilled to be able to give something back to this institution that means so much to so many people."

The evening ended with the former dean of the School of Divinity, Dr. Robert Lamb, leading the group in a hymn written by Dr. Cook, entitled "A Prayer." For more information about the School of Divinity Alumni Association, you may contact alumni@gardner-webb.edu or 704-406-3862.

GOAL Students Connect with Main Campus

Approximately 200 GOAL
students, friends and family members gathered at the main campus in Boiling Springs in October.

"GOAL Day" brings students who attend the 16 GOAL sites to campus to connect with the main campus and with one another.

The day of fellowship, information and football, began with lunch in the cafeteria. A reception helped GOAL students connect with the departments they generally speak with, but do not get to visit. The Office of Alumni Relations, the Graduate School/Graduate School of Business, library services, the NOEL program and others set up booths. The campus shop provided door prizes.

"MS. GARDNER-WEBB"

Meet Minna Rice. She was full of life, energy, kindness and service to others. And she was also affectionately known as "Ms. Gardner-Webb."

That title fit her perfectly, considering the GWU memorabilia displayed all throughout her home and of course the way she always talked about her experiences at Gardner-Webb. Her niece Eleanor Porter remembers how her aunt always loved to share stories about GWU with others.

"She loved the school so much because GWU paid attention to her. She always told everyone about the school and she kept every item she ever got from there and displayed it proudly."

Many people remember Ms. Rice as kind and caring, outgoing and talkative.

And she never stopped talking about Gardner-Webb. "She was so appreciative of her education at Gardner-Webb and she remembered the school so fondly because of the way everyone at GWU was so kind," Ms. Porter remembers. "She was so grateful for her experience that she chose to share her love of education as a teacher."

Ms. Rice's life was about learning, growing and serving those around her. Before she died, it was her heart's desire to give back to the school that had given so much to her. Those desires blended perfectly in her estate plans to create a scholarship called the Minna Lee Boling Rice Endowed Scholarship.

Students here at Gardner-Webb have the opportunity to receive an education because of the kindness of Minna Rice. They can study and learn, be proud of the school they go to, and hopefully one day give back to Gardner-Webb so other students can learn and grow and give to others. So the cycle continues. And this time, it all started with "Ms. Gardner-Webb."

Gardner-Webb is grateful to all of its supporters. Ms. Rice is just one among many who has made a difference through planned giving. If you are interested in how you can invest in the lives of GWU students through a current gift, capital gift or endowment, contact David Boan in the Office of Gift Planning at 704-406-3251.
