Abstract

A successful housing and residence education program is a vital component of a university's traditional undergraduate program. Such programs assist in the recruitment and retention of students as well as serve as a significant source of revenue. Furthermore, such programs are conducive to the ongoing spiritual, academic, and social development of the students who reside in residential communities; however, for such programs to effectively accomplish their respective missions, they must focus on their core mission and goals, effectively manage their occupancy, effectively train their staff, effectively maintain their facilities, effectively market the experiences they offer, and effectively assess their students' level of satisfaction with what is offered. The Housing and Residence Education Program of Gardner-Webb University is a housing program with a capacity of approximately 1,368 bed spaces, offering traditional residence hall, suite style, and apartment housing accommodations. From August 2013 through June 2017, the Gardner-Webb University Housing and Residence Education Program underwent significant changes in an effort to reinvent itself so it could better serve its students. Changes to the program during the referenced timeframe included but are not limited to the following: a better focus on mission, the implementation of a housing management software solution, more than $1,000,000.00 in facility updates, the implementation of a new student staff training curriculum, more comprehensive assessment efforts, and the creation and use of new marketing/promotional materials. The purpose of these changes was to assist the program in becoming a more effective program to better assist in the recruitment and retention of students.

The reinvention of the Housing Program of Gardner-Webb University has been a multi-year project involving a number of departments and personnel throughout the Gardner-Webb University Community.

2.1 Outline of Partnering Organization's Objectives

2.1.1 Objectives

- Improving the Housing and Residence Education Program of the University is vital to the overall success of the University's Traditional Undergraduate Program. A successful and effective housing program serves as both a good recruiting and retention tool for the University as well as a significant source of revenue.
- The Housing and Residence Education Program of Gardner-Webb University has a tremendous amount of potential to assist the University in its continued efforts to grow/increase enrollment. Furthermore, the project provided the opportunity to improve the residential student experience of the University.
- The purpose of the Housing and Residence Education Program within the parameters of the mission of the University and the Division of Student Development is to provide safe and comfortable accommodations that are conducive to the spiritual, academic, and social development of the residential population.

2.1.2 Success Criteria

The success of the project by Gardner-Webb University is measured by student retention, student satisfaction, and student recruitment. Multiple instruments and reports are gathered and used to assist with the University's ongoing assessment efforts. Housing and Residence Education alone employs the use of an annual Satisfaction Survey and one to two focus groups with students. Success is also measured by the number of students retained from year to year.

2.1.3 Risks

The primary risk associated with this project relates to the current condition of a number of the residential communities creating marketing, student recruitment, and student retention issues for the Department and the University. 4 Project Approach

4.1 Project Lifecycle Processes

The Housing and Residence Education Program of Gardner-Webb University is amidst a state of reinvention and/or renaissance. Over the next 5 years, it is hoped that the Housing and Residence Education Program can be dramatically changed for the better in the following four areas: occupancy management, facility management, staff training/development, and marketing. Each of the referenced areas has significant ramifications on the residential student experience and impacts the overall success of the housing program. The common denominator between each of these areas is that they all involve a number of departments external to Housing and Residence Education as well as groups external to the University. To succeed, Housing and Residence Education must work closely with these respective departments and groups.

8 Metrics and Results (Pull Survey Data to showcase performance requirements)

Methodology

A 29-question Housing and Residence Education Satisfaction Survey was emailed to Gardner-Webb University Residential Students in April 2014, April 2015, and April 2016. The survey instrument was created using Survey Monkey. In an effort to increase the response rate, students were made aware of an optional raffle for a 32-inch flat screen television that they could participate in if they completed the survey. There were multiple follow-up email notifications encouraging students to complete the survey. The survey was available for residential students to complete during the month of April each year.

The data collected were exported into an Excel file. Once the data were exported to excel, the questions associated with the raffle were deleted. The questions were grouped into four categories: RA/Staff, Community, Safety/Maintenance, and Satisfaction. Questions 12, 13, 14, 16, 22, and 23 are the questions that make up the RA/Staff Grouping. Questions 8, 9, 11, and 15 make up the Community Grouping. Questions 10, 17, 18, 19, 20, and 21 make up the Safety/Maintenance Grouping. Question 24 makes up the Satisfaction Grouping. Descriptive statistics were run on the Groupings for each year; see Tables 1-4 in Appendix A2. T tests were run on the groupings for each year both taking and not taking gender into account to determine if a difference existed; see Tables 5-16 in Appendix A2.

Analysis

A descriptive analysis was run for the gender, RA/Staff, Community, Safety/Maintenance, and Satisfaction variables. Once descriptive statistics were presented, the inferential statistics were analyzed using t tests.

T tests for males in relation to the RA/Staff Grouping were significant between 2014 versus 2015 ($t=9.957$, $p<0.000$), 2014 versus 2016 ($t=9.294$, $p<0.000$), but were not significant between 2015 versus 2016. Therefore, this indicates a decrease for males in satisfaction within the RA/Staff Grouping. T tests for females in relation to the RA/Staff Grouping were significant between 2014 versus 2015 ($t=-3.679$, $p<0.000$), but were not significant between 2015 versus 2016, or 2014 versus 2016. Therefore, this indicates an increase for females in satisfaction with the RA/Staff Grouping. Taking into account all students regardless of gender, the t tests were significant between 2014 versus 2016 ($t=2.867$, $p<0.004$). Therefore, this indicates an overall decrease in satisfaction with the RA/Staff Grouping.

T tests for males in relation to the Community Grouping were significant between 2014 versus 2015 ($t=7.621$, $p<0.000$), 2014 versus 2016 ($t=6.492$, $p<0.000$), but were not significant between 2015 and 2016. Therefore, this indicates a decrease for males in satisfaction within the Community Grouping. T tests for females in relation to the Community Grouping were not significant. Taking into account all students regardless of gender, the t tests were significant between 2014 versus 2015 ($t=3.917$, $p<0.000$) and 2014 versus 2016 ($t=4.428$, $p,0.000$), but not between 2015 versus 2016. Therefore, this indicates an overall decrease in satisfaction with the Community Grouping.

T tests for males in relation to the Safety/Maintenance Grouping were significant between 2014 and 2015 ($t=2.682$, $p<0.008$) and 2014 versus 2016 ($t=2.822$, $p<0.005$), but were not significant between 2015 and 2015. Therefore, this indicates a decrease for males in satisfaction within the Safety/Maintenance Grouping. T tests for females in relation to the Safety/Maintenance Grouping were not significant. Taking into account all students regardless of gender, the t tests were not significant.

T tests for males in relation to the Satisfaction Grouping were significant between 2014 versus 2015 ($t=4.557$, $p<0.000$) and 2014 versus 2016 ($t=4.224$, $p<0.000$), but not significant between 2015 versus 2016. Therefore, this indicates a decrease for males in satisfaction within the Satisfaction Grouping. T tests for females in relation to the Satisfaction Grouping were not significant. Taking into account all students regardless of gender, the t tests were significant between 2014 versus 2015 ($t=2.116$, $p<0.035$) and 2014 versus 2016 ($t=3.180$, $p<0.002$), but not between 2015 versus 2016. Therefore, this indicates an overall decrease in satisfaction with the Satisfaction Grouping.

Discussion

The analysis yielded both some expected and unexpected results. It was not surprising to see that there were differences between genders with the respective groupings. However, it was unexpected to learn of the decrease of satisfaction amongst male students from 2014 to 2015. This decrease could in part be related to some staffing assigned to specific male communities during this time period. A comparison of 2016 and 2017 data will need to be completed to see if improvement was made with relation to male satisfaction.

It was also surprising to see to see a significant increase in satisfaction among female students from 2014 to 2015, due to the decrease in male satisfaction. This increase could in part be related to some staffing assigned to specific female communities during this time period along with some facility improvements made to female residential facilities. A comparison between 2016 and 2017 data will need to be completed to see if these levels of satisfaction hold.

Additional Funding Needed for Housing Software Service Fees over the next 5 Years	$52,500.00
Total Estimated Budget	$3,431,767.00

The Reinvention of the Housing and Residence Education Program of Gardner-Webb University is a costly endeavor. Many of the facilities are in poor condition and need significant updates. Furthermore, the Housing and Residence Education Program is of a size that necessitates the use of a Housing Management Software Solution which also has a considerable cost associated with it. Nonetheless, funding is necessary for both to ensure that the Housing and Residence Education Program continues to prosper and grow.

It is also of note that there are some smaller items funded through the Housing and Residence Education Program Budget to assist in the continued reinvention of the Housing and Residence Education Program. For example, Housing and Residence Education has a Survey Monkey Account with an annual fee of $300.00. Additionally, Housing and Residence Education spends approximately $1,000.00 annually on promotional materials.

This project is designed to address specific issues that limit the effectiveness of the Housing and Residence Education Program of Gardner-Webb University. However, this project is also designed to help foster a change in the culture of the Department. Alas, many of the ideas to address concerns whether it be occupancy management, facilities, staff training, marketing, or staffing itself will eventually become so ingrained in the culture that the areas this project are impacting at present will continue to be impacted annually. This consultancy project is not only designed to address immediate concerns and/or issues, it is designed to impact the culture in a way that the current issues do not present themselves again at a later date. The below graph exemplifies the cultural mindset that is being integrated into the culture of the Housing and Residence Education Program of Gardner-Webb University. The ultimate goal is to continuously identify issues and concerns, develop processes to address those issues and concerns, implement those processes, assess the effectiveness of new processes, and then begin again. The housing program must be willing to adapt to meet the needs and expectations of an ever-changing student body. As such, it is imperative that quality assurance be incorporated into the culture of the Department.

As the project continues, assessment will become an increasingly important component of what is done to impact the housing program in a positive fashion. All analyzed data will be shared with the appropriate offices/departments on the Campus with recommendations of how to address any and all areas of concern.
