Division

University Moves Full Force Into Division One;
Trustee Vote Resonates Around Campus, Region

Gardner-Webb versus Kentucky in the first round of the NCAA Men's Division One Basketball Tournament?

"That's the pot of gold at the end of the rainbow right there,"

President Chris White exclaimed during the late afternoon hours on October 21, only minutes after the

unanimously voted to move the school's athletic program from NCAA Division

Two to Division One status. That's the same as the Dukes and the North Carolinas and even the Furmans and Woffords of the collegiate world.

"Gardner-Webb came of age today," Dr. White said after the trustee vote. "Opportunities don't come often and they don't linger. The time is now for Gardner-Webb."

All of the men's and women's intercollegiate athletics at the school, with the exception of football, will be played at the Division One level.

The football team will compete in Division I-AA, at the same level as programs like Appalachian State and Western Carolina. The NCAA must receive notification by June 2000 of GWU's intent to reclassify. From that point, the first two years will be transitional years, and then in 2002-2003, Gardner-Webb joins the big boys for good.

Dr. White said the move signifies the latest step in Gardner-Webb's ascendancy to elite status in not only athletics, but every aspect of university life. "I'm excited, and I expect the student body and everyone associated with the school to see this as one of the more significant moves the school has made in the past decade. Gardner-Webb is definitely on the move, and it's a sign of the maturing nature of the school, a can-do attitude. Division Two was great ... but Division Two is not enough. Today we got married, and now it's up to the school to make the marriage work."

He added that the benefits of Division One athletics are many, including enhancing school prestige, the opportunity to help the university grow, and most importantly, instant national recruiting exposure for not only athletes, but top-shelf students and faculty.

"Ever see the tickertape run across the bottom of CNN, the one that posts the scores? Only Division One scores run on that ticker. And Gardner-Webb will be on that ticker for all the nation to see. You can't buy that kind of exposure. The recognition factor will be immeasurable."

The ability to raise money to fund both athletics and academics should offset the change brought about by the move. "But," White explained, "the university is committed to the idea and we know right now that we can pay for it. It won't cost any more to attend Gardner-Webb because of the move. Financially, this is an investment, because scholarships and staff and travel cost money. But we can handle it, and we will."

He stressed that the move will benefit other parts of the university besides athletics, and that he expects academic standards to increase with the move.

"This is a proclamation that the university has achieved a status worthy of competition with major universities in this region. In our society, the perception is that Division One athletics constitute excellence."

Roy Kirby, head football coach at nearby Crest High School and a GWU alumnus, said, "I see every part of the school and Cleveland County as a whole benefiting from this decision. This is huge. Division One is really the big time, and I'm proud to be a part of it."

He added, "This is an exciting time to be a Gardner-Webb graduate, and I'm sure more people locally will take an interest in the school as the athletic teams, and the university, grow in stature."

Dr. White offered only one word of caution to GWU fans, students and boosters: Patience.

"We won't be competitive the first few years. There's no immediate return. But it will pay off in the long run, and I hope that everyone associated with Gardner-Webb University will be better off in the long run because of it."

MUSIC MASTER

He's played music with Grammy Award Winner John Tesh. He's conducted orchestras all over the world. He's an ordained minister, an educator, and the father of three. But, if you ask Dr. Steven Plate about any of these things, he will assure you "... it's just another day at the office."

Plate has been professor of music at Gardner-Webb University since 1990, where he is also the conductor of the University/Community Orchestra and teacher of music theory, music literature and instrumental conducting. "I love being an educator," says Plate. "I can't begin to express how gratifying it is to see your students succeed in their careers. I attempt to offer a bridge between theory and practical applications of music."

Plate discovered at an early age that music was going to be a part of his life. "My parents always said that I would sing myself to sleep as a baby. It seems that I have always had a love for music, even then," he remembered. Plate began studying music at the age of seven, and when he was 12 he became a piano student of Gloria Volanti of the Lincoln Center and was accepted into the Manhattan School of Performing Arts. Plate was also a frequent recitalist at the Steinway Recital Hall in New York City and was heavily involved in church and school music programs. He says that those experiences had a profound impact on his life.

"It was after Christmas during my senior year in high school that I knew that I wanted to pursue music as a career. I just knew."

Plate earned a bachelor's degree in music education at Evangel College in Springfield, Missouri, and while attending Evangel, Plate studied piano with internationally known pianist and organist June Kean, a second generation Rachmaninoff protégé. Plate received his Master of Music and Doctor of Musical Arts degrees from the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music. He taught for nine years at Evangel College, and he served as a music minister at a Methodist church in Maine before coming to Gardner-Webb in 1990.

Today, Plate is best known for being the music director and principal conductor of the prestigious Charlotte Repertoire Orchestra (CRO), a post he's held since 1991. With more than 75 members, the orchestra is becoming one of the most critically acclaimed civic orchestras in the southeast. Comprised of professional and avocational musicians, the CRO has given performance opportunities to numerous rising musicians now entering the national and international performing circuits.

The CRO has also served as the premiere orchestra for many nationally known performers. "John Tesh called me and said that he was interested in having the CRO perform with him. We had two weeks to put the orchestra together and had only two hours of rehearsals. But, I feel that we were successful."

Plate has also served as guest conductor for several orchestras around the world, including orchestras in Guam, Japan and Russia.

"Music is the universal language. It's a language that breaks through cultural, political and religious barriers. People are able to make connections through music when all else seems to fail."

The Unpredictable

Road

Dr. Charles Moore sits behind a desk in a cramped office in the Washburn House on campus. Postcards and artwork are sprayed across every wall from top to bottom. A student he is advising waits seated in the floor of the narrow hallway outside his door. Moore is smiling. He is at a good moment in his life, he declares. A fun-loving professor of Spanish, he hardly gives the impression that for three-and-a-half stressful years he was a player in matters of national security.

His title in his secret life? “Latin American Intelligence Analyst.” With it came hectic travel requirements and an amazing new group of phrases to which he would quickly become accustomed, like “top secret clearance” and “highly classified mission.”

Two years out of graduate school and working as a civil servant (“I’m not military ... by far,” he says laughing), he was thrust into something called the Joint Special Operations Command, a branch of the Department of Defense at Fort Bragg. Soon he was performing threat analyses of U.S. personnel in Latin America. Plainly stated, he acted as a liaison between spies in the field and the commanding generals who took their orders directly from the

Moore: “You Never Know Where You’re Going To End Up”

White House chief of staff.

“I analyzed these spy reports for credibility, which meant I was constantly traveling between D.C. and several Latin American countries. It was fascinating, really. I had to learn the cultures of all these countries and, based on my knowledge and experience, judge whether the information we were receiving was accurate, harmful or helpful.”

He adds that the U.S. invasion of Panama was escalating during his time with the Department of Defense as well. “My job was to know who Manuel Noriega was, where he was, and who he was with,” Moore states, almost incredulous that he had been given such responsibility.

Wondering if maybe he has divulged too much about his government experience, he pauses and shrugs his shoulders. He figures he’s safe. “They made a movie about the whole thing. It was called ‘Delta Force.’ Maybe you’ve seen it? It had Charles Bronson and everything.”

He adds, “I’m happy that part of my life is over with, but I’m extremely proud of what I accomplished there. How many others can say they did what I did and saw what I saw?”

Life now is more predictable, more stable. And that suits Charles Moore just fine. “I turned 40 this past summer and I wondered what I had done with my life ... and when I look back on it, I realize I have a lot to offer my students, not only in the classroom, but with advice about real life.”

And, he says, Gardner-Webb provides the perfect environment for that interaction. “The freedom we have here to invest in our students and in our own pursuits just thrills me. I mean, who would have ever thought that I could write a book?”

El arte de predicar de Juan de Espinosa Medrano en La novena maravilla, which is being published before year-end 1999, was an outgrowth of his dissertation, he explains. “And it’s just the greatest thing I’ve ever done.”

Considering the life Moore’s led, that’s saying quite a lot.

Catcher Rising Star

Baseball Star ... Law School Applicant ... Future Politician ... Author ... what next?

Baseball players are only concerned with their batting averages. Writing and reading are limited to English majors. Students must be interested in just one field of study.

Once in a while, someone comes along and breaks all these stereotypes. Senior Wes Barkley is a catcher for Gardner-Webb's baseball team, a double major in history and political science, and is planning to go to law school. But that's not all.

Barkley is also a writer. His favorite genre is historical fiction, and he specializes in the Civil War. He recently signed a contract for The Anderson Chronicles, a five-book series that traces five brothers through the Civil War. It is based on a Civil War unit around Catawba, near Hickory, where Barkley lived during high school.

He got the idea for the series from a research paper he wrote for one of his GWU classes. The first book, How the Gallant Fell, will be released when he completes the second book. Barkley explained that when a series is being published, the next one must be finished before the preceding one can be released.

"I developed the characters for my books from the personalities of my roommates and my younger brother. The characters even look like them," Barkley said. He explained that his roommates are perfect for observation because he sees them all of the time and can predict how they would act in certain situations.

He attributes some of his success to the teachers at Gardner-Webb. "I've always been interested in the way people wrote, so I read a lot. I wanted to write, but did not do much until the teachers here helped me to see that I was good at it," Barkley admitted.

"I always thought that since I was not good at grammar, I could not be a writer. Then I realized that editors are the ones who are in charge of that," Barkley said. Like any other author, he also experienced the surprise of dealing with editors who changed not only his words, but also his ideas. "The trick is to find an editor who thinks like you do," he advised.

Another credit is due to the Macintosh computer lab in the Communication Studies Hall, where Barkley worked during his freshman and sophomore years. It was there that he began writing a lot because it was quiet and he was alone most of the time.

Now he works in the Bost Gym weight room, which is convenient because the baseball program requires that players participate in workout sessions.

Baseball has been a large part of Barkley's life "from the beginning." He explained, "I have relatives who were professional baseball players, so it was natural for me to play."

As for his baseball future, being a law student and an author will not leave much time for him to play. "I'll always love baseball. I'd like to coach Little League one day," Barkley said.

Barkley has applied to law school at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, Wake Forest, Campbell and the University of South Carolina. He plans to practice law for a while and then get into politics. "Being a strong Christian and being involved in politics at the same time will be challenging," he said.

He also plans to publish more books in his free time. For recreation, Barkley enjoys all sports and loves to read novels by Tom Clancy. He admires Clancy's style and use of dialogue.

Barkley was born in Pensacola, Florida, on a Marine Corps base. He and his brother and sister grew up all over, spending the bulk of their time in Florida, North Carolina, and Virginia.

His father, William S. Barkley, Jr., an alumnus of Gardner-Webb, took him to many Civil War battlefields in Virginia. These visits gave Wes the historical background necessary to write his books.

Barkley's awards and recognitions include Presidential Associate, SAAC member, recipient of Presidential Scholarships and Veteran Scholarships, and the Dean's List.

Alumnus of the Future: Dana Grant

Dana Grant, who is expected to graduate in May 2000, is the first recipient of the Alumnus of the Future Award. The Gardner-Webb University Office of Alumni and Parent Relations officially presented this award to Grant during Homecoming ceremonies on October 8, 1999.

Members of the Student Alumni Association nominated Grant for this award. "I'm very humbled because it represents one person who stands for the same values GWU does. I'm honored that they thought I represented that," Grant said.

A psychology major with a religious education minor, Grant finds time to serve as a senior campaign committee member, a nursing home coordinator, a volunteer at homeless shelters and a worship leader on campus.

She has been very active with the Christian Service Organization and Christian Ministries United Council, and serves as a key member of FOCUS (Fellowship of Christians United in Service), which coordinates student-led services in local churches. She has also traveled with missionary Charles Shelton to Brazil, Puerto Rico, and various states within the U.S.

According to Grant, Gardner-Webb's biggest influence on her life has been "the examples others set by showing that it is possible to live a Christian life and walk closely with the Lord."

SENIOR PINNING CEREMONY DRAWS ITS LARGEST CROWD

Families hugged, sweethearts traded tender glances, and parents offered a special word of encouragement and support. On an occasion that felt more like Valentine's Day rather than a mild, fall evening, the third annual Senior Pinning Ceremony this fall filled all in attendance with unmistakable emotion.

The ceremony, first held in 1997, is a time for seniors to reflect back on sacrifices made by families, tears shed with friends, and personal obstacles overcome as they near graduation. This year 625 people attended the ceremony, held in Lindsay Court on campus.

The cornerstone of the ceremony is the presentation of a specially designed pin from the University to the seniors. Marked with the Gardner-Webb arch, the most traditional and recognizable symbol on campus, and also marked with a cross, the pin is placed on the coat or lapel of the senior by someone who is of special significance to the student. Professors, parents, boyfriends and girlfriends, grandparents and roommates were among those invited to present this special memento to a senior.

Seniors were asked to explain why they chose the pinner, and the pinner was asked to explain why their student was important to them. "The pin is just a symbol, but it holds significance," said Drew Van Horn, GWU v.p. for university relations. "In generations past, students marched through the arch on graduation day as a rite of passage. It is made of granite, standing firm and unable to be moved. The cross is reminiscent of our Christian heritage, and we hope you have come into contact with God and become a changed person while at Gardner-Webb.

"With the placement of this pin on you by someone you love, you're sealing friendships and memories of your GWU experience."

This year's ceremony had an extra special flavor to it as hundreds of GOAL students were on hand to participate. Scheduling conflicts between the ceremony and GOAL classes in years past had made it difficult for the program's seniors to attend. Addressing the GOAL students specifically, GWU President Dr. Chris White said, "The process of gaining your education has not been a sprint, it's been a marathon. So I challenge you to press on and finish with a flourish."

AGENCY COUNSELING STUDENTS: WATCH US GROW

Spotlight On A Flourishing Master's Program

“Combining the practical with the theoretical.” That phrase sometimes loses its luster in academia because it many times is used too loosely and too often. But there is perhaps no better way to describe one of the greatest strengths of the agency counseling program within the GWU Graduate School of Education and Counseling, according to Dr. Frieda Brown, GWU professor of psychology, who began this program.

“With nearly 80 students enrolled in this 12-year-old program, agency counseling is a professional counseling specialty that involves the application of principles of psychotherapy, human development, learning theory, group dynamics and the assessment of mental illness and dysfunctional behavior,” Brown said. “It also includes the practice of prevention, early intervention, and treatment of mental and emotional disorders for individuals, families, and/or groups and consultation and education for community groups interested in promoting healthy lifestyles within the community.”

The program is offered on Gardner-Webb's Boiling Springs and Statesville campuses.

Students leave this rigorous master's program as licensed professional counselors, equipped to move on to professional roles in settings like mental health facilities, juvenile counseling centers and departments of social services, among others.

A cornerstone of the program is exposing students to various facilities where their talents would be useful, as well as allowing students to observe in action the theories and models they routinely study in their classes. Case in point: a recent trip by 32 agency counseling students to Atlanta to observe the Carter Mental Health Center Project, where mental health policy is created and implemented, and The Bridge, a residential treatment facility for adolescents.

Laura Genois, a student on the trip, noted, “What was so interesting about our trip to Atlanta was the dichotomy of possible settings for someone in the counseling profession: from hands-on treatment to addressing global health and mental health issues.”

Judy Howell, also a student, added, “The Atlanta trip was fantastic! Experience is always the best teacher. Being able to observe firsthand an operational adolescent center and mental health advocacy facility were invaluable opportunities. This was a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity.”

Yet another student, Jennifer Hatfield, put the experience into perspective for all who attended: “I was very encouraged when I saw that the theories we are currently studying are being used in the agency settings. It was also helpful to take the theoretical portion of our program and to

“Taking professional trips, during which students are able to be encouraged that they are learning practical skills, is a key to this program's success.”

– Dr. Darlene Gravett, dean of the Graduate School of Education and Counseling actually see how it fits with an agency program.”

Dr. Brown and Dr. Jackson Rainer, GWU associate professor of psychology, accompanied the students on the trip. Both labeled the venture a great success. Also affirming the trip's value was Dr. Darlene Gravett, dean of the Graduate School of Education and Counseling.

Forever Enshrined In The Hall of Fame

With everyone talking about Gardner-Webb's move to Division One athletics, it might be easy to forget the university's roots, first as a NAIA power and then as a successful NCAA Division Two institution. The Hall of Fame banquet, held during Homecoming weekend, made sure we remember notable athletes who have contributed greatly to GWU's history as an outstanding producer of top-level talent.

Honored this year were three inductees – Arnold Isaacs, Darrell Perry and Darrell Middleton. A fourth inductee, Dr. Gene Washburn, was honored for a lifetime of service to GWU athletic teams.

A former GWU Alumnus of the Year recipient, Isaacs has built a legacy as an undeniable success in the business world, leading his construction company (F.N. Thompson Inc.) in such high-profile projects as the Charlotte Coliseum and Ericsson Stadium. But those who followed the Runnin' Bulldogs in the 1950s know that Arnold Isaacs was a star long before dominating the Southeast's construction industry.

Isaacs established a reputation as one of the elite three-sport athletes in GWU history during his two years at Gardner-Webb from 1955 to 1957. Known for lightning quickness and a hard-nosed playing style in football, baseball and basketball, Isaacs earned many honors during his freshman and sophomore seasons. As an offensive halfback, Isaacs capped off a stellar sophomore season with a three-touchdown performance versus Lees-McRae that propelled him to All-Conference status. He averaged 22 points per game on the basketball court as a freshman to earn a spot on the All-Conference team. And as a baseball infielder, Isaacs was one of five Gardner-Webb players selected to the All-State team. He went on to play football at Western Carolina University.

Darrell Perry left his mark on GWU athletics and the South Atlantic Conference as one of the toughest defensive players in conference history. A natural athlete who grew up with future NFL stars, brothers William ("The Refrigerator") and Michael Dean Perry, Darrell was the cornerstone of a defensive unit that dominated the competition for four years (1982–85).

Among his incredible accomplishments include being named the 1985 SAC-8 Defensive Player of the Year with 163 tackles, a school-record 119 solo hits and a school-record 11 quarterback sacks. The "Icebox" was named All SAC-8 three times in his career and finished his stint at GWU with 399 tackles, 24 quarterback sacks, five interceptions and eight fumble recoveries.

Darrell Middleton is simply the most decorated running back in Gardner-Webb gridiron history. Middleton ran through, around and over South Atlantic Conference opponents from 1986 to 1989.

A 1989 NAIA All-American, Middleton's resume also includes being the all-time leading rusher at GWU with 4,032 yards. He has the most career touchdowns (38), the most career carries (618), and the most 1,000-yard rushing seasons (two, 1988 and 1989). His #25 football jersey is one of only four to ever be retired at the school.

Dr. Gene Washburn was also inducted into the Hall of Fame for his unyielding service to GWU athletics as team doctor.

BASEBALL EXCITEMENT IN FULL SWING

A new air of excitement has surrounded the GWU baseball program of late, due in large part to a campus visit by one of Major League Baseball's best pitchers and an announcement that new facilities are on the way.

On a sunny November day the baseball team held its 100-inning fundraising marathon with a very special guest in attendance. Tommy John, a former Major League pitching great who notched 288 career wins, lent his services for the event by pitching all 100 innings of the contest. John, whose son is a member of the GWU baseball team, looked like his old self on the mound by sneaking fastballs inside on some hitters and throwing his trademark slider to others. The format of the game allowed each hitter one swing, with foul balls and strikes counting as outs.

Surprising everyone in attendance, including Head Coach Clyde Miller, John said after 50 innings that he thought he could throw a complete game against the split-squad teams. Afterward John graciously signed autographs, posed for pictures and granted interviews. The most exciting news of the day, however, came during the lunch break when President Chris White announced to players, parents and fans that a new baseball fieldhouse facility would be constructed immediately just beyond the right-field fence. Offices, dressing rooms, practice equipment and storage space will all be housed within the facility. Tennis offices will also be housed in the new building. Twelve new tennis courts are currently being constructed adjacent to the baseball stadium.

Dr. White said upgrading baseball facilities has been a need for some time now, but the announcement of GWU moving to Division I simply sped up the process. The president said once the building is complete, which will be in early Spring 2000, priority will be placed on upgrading the actual baseball stadium.

Baseball Coach Clyde Miller shows off plans for the new baseball facility

GWU BASKETBALL COACH NAMED To NORTH GREENVILLE HALL OF FAME

Rick Scruggs, head men's basketball coach at GWU, was recently inducted into the North Greenville College Athletic Hall of Fame. Scruggs held his first head coaching position at North Greenville and tallied a 74-20 won-loss record in three years there (1986-89).

Scruggs was recognized for being a two-time conference Coach of the Year at North Greenville and for fielding conference championship teams in 1987-88 and 1988-89. Scruggs also garnered Region Coach of the Year honors in 1988-89 while leading his team to the NJCAA National Tournament and compiling a 30-4 record, which still stands as an all-time, single-season best at the school.

While his records and achievements are significant, said former NGC president Dr. Jimmy Epting, Scruggs is also worthy of this honor because of his exceptional ability to motivate and inspire athletes. Scruggs was also recognized for developing "Shooting for Christ" at Gardner-Webb, a group of student-athletes who lead worship services and Bible studies at area churches.

Although he developed several professional basketball prospects during his time at North Greenville, Scruggs credits the school with more than on-the-court rewards. "My life was transformed at North Greenville. It's a special place to me not only because the school gave me my first shot at being a head coach, but because I met my wife there and I was led to the Lord there as well. And, as a bonus, we happened to play some pretty good basketball during that time, too."

SINCE WE LAST MET

New Character Book Includes GWU

Gardner-Webb learned in October that it was once again honored among an elite few by the John Templeton Foundation for leadership in the field of student character development.

JOHN
FOUNDATION

GWU was officially recognized in The Templeton Guide: Colleges that Encourage Character Development, a guidebook that was released nationwide recently. Specifically, Gardner-Webb was named among the U.S. colleges and universities that demonstrate an exemplary record of commitment to inspiring students to lead ethical and civic-minded lives.

Singled out by the publication was GWU's "Leadership Through Civic Responsibility" certificate program. Through academic instruction, work experience, and professional relationships, students are introduced to leadership theory and practice, participate in volunteer service, and experience Christian service through servant leadership.

There are two paths of specialization in this certificate program:

- Leadership Through Public Service – participants receive a hands-on education through involvement in governmental and political activities, internships, and opportunities to meet and work with notable public servants.
- Leadership Through Community Service – participants volunteer many hours of service to needy individuals and families and directly assist leaders of a variety of community service programs.

The Templeton Guide

states that "the college years are critical to character development. In college, young people are often living without parents for the first time and face new and difficult moral and ethical decisions. Colleges have a special responsibility and role to play in helping students navigate between increased personal freedom and new responsibilities."

Blind Faith Captures GWU Audience

It was the story of man versus nature, man versus man, and man versus himself. It was the story of a man, who against unsurmountable odds achieved the impossible and became the only blind person in history to successfully hike the entire Appalachian Trail.

On November 29-30, Gardner-Webb hosted motivational speaker and critically acclaimed author, Bill Irwin. In 1990, the world watched in amazement as Bill Irwin walked over 2,000 miles from Georgia to Maine on the Appalachian Trail, accompanied only by his guide dog, Orient. "It was something that I had to do. I really felt that God wanted me to walk the trail as a testimony to him," noted Irwin. "God had changed my life. I had been a broken man, emotionally and physically. But, I discovered that God can use anyone, regardless of their history or physical limitations."

Irwin remarked that he was no stranger to adventure. In fact, he had defied death numerous times, even before attempting to walk the treacherous Appalachian Trail. "I nearly died at the age of 21 – I was once told that I had terminal cancer. I overcame 26 years of alcoholism and, at the age of 32, I lost my sight," remarked Irwin. "The Grim Reaper may have been speaking my name, but, I was listening to another call."

Irwin's unique message of perseverance captured the Gardner-Webb audience through his homespun, self-deprecating humor and life experiences (over 30 years in corporate America, recovery from alcoholism, the Appalachian Trail experience, and encounters as a family counselor).

Irwin has also inspired millions through his critically acclaimed autobiography, "Blind Courage." More information is available on Irwin on the internet at www.billirwin.com.

A Different Way To Call Campus

Gardner-Webb University has enjoyed significant growth in the last several years and has experienced several changes in the process. One recent change due to campus expansion has been the University's adoption of a new telephone exchange, 704-406.

Robin Gore, GWU telecommunications coordinator, explained, "We needed another large block of numbers to accommodate future growth of the University, but there were no more 704-434 numbers available for Gardner-Webb. So, to maintain consistency, the decision was made to use a new exchange."

Now, when trying to reach a department or individual on the Gardner-Webb campus, callers should use the new 406 prefix.

In addition, the main switchboard number has changed to 704-406-4000.

Gore said that the 704-434 exchange will be phased out in residence halls as early as this spring, while numbers used for marketing purposes may be accessed with the 434 prefix for an extended transition period.

If you have difficulty accessing a GWU extension with the 704-406 phone exchange, you may need to contact either your local or long distance phone company, depending on your calling location.

Simply alert the phone company that you are trying to call a number with a prefix that has changed from 434 to 406 and, according to Gore, the company then should add 406 to its list of phone prefixes for Boiling Springs, NC.

For further information about the new Gardner-Webb telephone exchange, you may call Robin Gore at 704-406-3996 or 704-434-3996.

Grant Will Aid Campus Planning Strategy

The Gardner-Webb administration announced recently that the Teagle Foundation has granted the institution just over $273,000 for the purpose of funding GWU's strategic planning process and campus facilities master plan.

The strategic plan involves determining campus-wide goals for the future, and the master plan involves determining the strategy of how the campus' physical resources will be used and expanded.

One recent change due to campus expansion has been the University's adoption of a new phone exchange, 704-406.

Also funded will be the hiring of a director of Institutional Planning & Research; the hiring of a strategic planning consultant; a planning retreat with all constituents represented: faculty, staff, alumni, trustees, students, and community members; and the Master Planner fee.

The grant will be paid over two years and the process is expected to last from January 2000 to July 2001.

M.B.A. /M.Div. Degree on the Horizon?

This fall, the Gardner-Webb University board of trustees voted to approve a new dual degree program.

This potential program (MBA/M.Div) will be a marriage between the M. Christopher White School of Divinity and the School of Business.

Officials believe that the MBA/M.Div degree will have a monumental impact on the entire church family. Dr. Anthony Negbenebor, director of the Gardner-Webb MBA Program says that, "With this added degree program, Gardner-Webb will be setting the standard for developing the church leaders of tomorrow. Currently there is not another program like this in the Southeast."

"We have qualified ministers with little knowledge of business and we also have qualified business leaders in churches with very little knowledge of theology," notes Negbenebor. "We see this degree as a way to bridge that gap."

A MBA/M.Div student would take courses offered through both the School of Divinity and the School of Business.

Some of the projected courses for this degree are Pastoral Care & Counseling, Christian Theology, Administration & Leadership in the Church, Business Law & Ethics, Strategic Management and Human Resource Management.

"This degree would change the way that we look at church leadership," notes Negbenebor.

Officials hope to begin offering this degree in the fall of 2000.

WGWG Recognized With National Award

Gardner-Webb University's radio station, WGWG, recently received the highest honor by the Communicator Awards, the distinguished Crystal Award of Excellence.

The Crystal Award of Excellence was presented to WGWG for the feature program – "The Webb Sessions." The interview-based "Webb Sessions" spotlights music industry talents from around the world, and offers insights on the people behind the music.

The Communicator Awards is a national awards organization that recognizes outstanding work in the communications field. Entries are judged by industry professionals who look for companies or individuals whose talents exceeds a high standard of excellence and whose work serves as a benchmark for the industry. There were nearly 1,200 entries in the 1999 Communicator Awards Audio competition. Other winning entries included productions for Universal Studios, McDonald's, Sears and Temple University.

The Communicator Awards holds annual competitions for VIDEO (Television Commercials/Programs/News and Video/Films), AUDIO and PRINT MEDIA.

WGWG can be heard throughout the world on the GWU website at www.gardner-webb.edu.

Freshmen Initiated into GWU as "People Who Care"

by Courtnie Walton

This year's freshman orientation gave students a chance to put Gardner-Webb's motto into practice.

Besides all the memorable get-to-know-each-other games, students also participated in community service projects designed to introduce students to the community as "People Who Care."

Students took part in a variety of community services, which included visiting the elderly, tutoring middle school students, doing yard work, washing windows, painting houses and cleaning up the highway.

Each CCXP (Contemporary College Experience) class was assigned a service project with its own agency, adding up to a total of 18 different agencies involved.

Each class provided one afternoon of service to the projects.

Several agencies that benefitted from these service opportunities include the Life Enrichment Center, Hospice of Cleveland County, Salvation Army, Cleveland County Girl's Club, Adopt-A-Highway and the Abuse Prevention Council.

Former GWU Volunteer Coordinator Jennifer Boroughs and current GWU Volunteer Coordinator Kelly Brame organized these projects because they wanted incoming students to gain information about volunteer agencies.

Brame said he hopes freshmen learned that "they can make a difference. Their time and efforts count."

He received positive reactions from the students and the agencies.

Brame said he trusts that these projects helped the community to "establish deeper relations with Gardner-Webb University, and found that GWU is a good resource for meeting needs in the community."

Bruce Moore, dean of student development, took his CCXP class to the Life Enrichment Center. "It was fantastic. I was very proud of how the students related to the residents," he said.

Another CCXP class joined his at the center, and a total of approximately 40 students sang hymns and played bingo with the residents.

Student Patrick Woody's CCXP class went to Crest Middle School for a tour of the facilities and possible opportunities to interact with the students.

He said, "It was informative and gave me an incentive to find out more about service."

GWU Launches Kids Program

by Courtnie Walton

This summer, Gardner-Webb will launch a new program funded by the Z. Smith Reynolds Foundation called "Journey of Joy."

It will benefit 16-20 seventh grade students from Cleveland, Rutherford, and Polk counties who have been selected by both GWU faculty and counselors and teachers from participating schools.

Students will participate in a two-week residency at Gardner-Webb during the summer. They will also attend an orientation in the spring and three or four Saturday enrichment and training programs throughout the school year with their parents.

The interdisciplinary curriculum will show participants how different disciplines relate to each other as opposed to the standard division of subjects. "Journey of Joy" will include the students, parents, counselors and teachers, and the community through its field trips, experiments and mentoring.

The spirit of the crowd and the determination of the football team were not to be denied before, during and after the big win against Lenoir-Rhyne.

HOME COMING '99

Tailgating, face painting, kids laughing and students enjoying a luau by the lake were all priceless memories of Homecoming '99.

AWARDS AROUND FOR ALUMNI

Kevin Todd Bess '95 B.A. is currently attending the U.S. Air Force Navigator Flight School in Pensacola, FL, while serving as a Second Lieutenant. Lt. Bess was a Distinguished Graduate from the Army Air Traffic Control Course at Ft. Rucker, AL

It was an evening of recognitions and remembrances as Gardner-Webb University alumni gathered for the Alumni Awards Banquet held on October 8. During the Homecoming weekend event, several alumni were honored, including the Alumnus of the Year, Young Alumnus of the Year, Alumnus of the Future, inductees into the Gallery of Distinguished Graduates and new Alumni Board Members.

The 1999 Alumnus of the Year, Tom Bell '71 B.A., is the owner and CEO of Bell Transportation Systems in Atlanta, GA. He has demonstrated his support of academics by establishing numerous scholarships at his alma mater.

Additionally, he serves as president of the Bulldog Club, and he personally and financially has supported several Gardner-Webb athletic teams, including the baseball and women's basketball programs. Bell also has recently taken over responsibilities as director of the Athletic Steering Committee at GWU.

Drew Van Horn, GWU vice president for university relations, said of Bell, "Tom has brought honor to Gardner-Webb by the way he benefits his community while remembering his alma mater. Alumni like Tom are key to the success of Gardner-Webb. We are as proud of him as he is of us."

Also recognized at the banquet was Young Alumnus of the Year Martin White '93 B.A., a lieutenant with the United States Navy Judge Advocate General's Corps. Lieutenant White is currently stationed at the Naval Legal Defense Service Office in Norfolk, VA, as claims department head. White supervises 54 personnel, including 10 attorneys, and manages the largest department in the Navy JAG Corps. He recently was recognized with the Navy and Marine Corps Achievement Medal for service as defense counsel department head.

At Gardner-Webb, White earned the Most Outstanding Male Graduate Award and the William Withrow Political Science Award while also participating in the University Honors Program. He served as president of the Alpha Chi National Honor Society and was a student representative to the National Council for Alpha Chi. White was also a letterman in tennis at GWU.

A new honor presented by the Alumni Office, the Alumnus of the Future Award, was given to GWU student Dana Grant, who plans on graduating in May 2000. She said, "I'm very humbled because the award represents one person who stands for the same values Gardner-Webb does." (See page 8)

Laurie Varley '93, GWU director of alumni relations, hailed the weekend as a resounding success. "It's a great feeling to have so many outstanding alumni gathered together at Homecoming. Just looking across the room at the Alumni Awards Banquet made all of us at the University realize that we should be very proud of the people who represent this institution as alumni."

Sharon Randall

'60s spotlight

Gardner-Webb alumnus Sharon Case Randall '68 A.A. has introduced her alma mater to newspaper readers across the nation. As a syndicated columnist through Scripps-Howard, Randall has the opportunity to share her life experiences and reflections with people throughout the United States.

"I have written columns about Gardner-Webb and have shared the memories of my experience there. It was a time in my life that I enjoyed because I had the chance to discuss issues with fellow students. We stimulated each other's thinking – like iron on iron," she recalled.

Randall said that her teachers in high school as well as her GWU professors told her she was gifted as a writer, but she did not realize that she could have a career in writing. "It never occurred to me to write for a living. My teachers encouraged me to write, but I thought that only meant I had good grammar."

Her start in the newspaper business actually began in the newspaper library of The Monterey County Herald in the Monterey Bay area of California. Randall worked there part-time so she could be at home in the afternoon with her children, Josh, Joanna and Nate. A few years later, after writing several well-received freelance pieces, Randall began writing features for the paper on a full-time basis, covering events like Bill Clinton's first inauguration. Now, Randall crafts columns two times a week which are available to 400 newspapers nationwide.

Randall's column, "The Bay Window," provides a personal look into her life and the things in life which touch her. She includes a range of her experiences from coping with the loss of her husband, Randy, to how the smell of gardenias triggers memories of her grandmother's home.

"Really, it's about ordinary, everyday things but I try to state the obvious in a different way. When you write about things you care about, like family, children and relationships, I find people care about those things, too. We all have similar emotions. The human experience is a shared one."

When she looks back on what influenced her style of commentating on the world around her, Randall remembers how her family used to spend time on the front porch during summer evenings, making observations and telling stories.

"Although I am not a professional storyteller, I do believe that writing columns comes down to telling a story. I try to focus on something and finely tune it, like looking at life through a microscope," she explained. "The actual process of writing my stories is hard work, but it is rewarding to hear that what I have done has touched someone, has been useful or entertaining."

In fact, Randall said that although she lives in California and writes for a local audience, she has received letters from people in every state who feel a connection to what she reveals in her columns. "We are reflective by nature. Humans have the need to reflect but don't have time because we are too busy running around. It takes about 10 minutes to read my column and in that time, people have a moment to reflect about things in their own lives. They seem to relate because we are all more alike than we are different."

'70s spotlight

Brenda Gray '73 B.A. was recently named vice president of development and communications for the Baptist Children's Homes of North Carolina.

She brings a "deep commitment to children, a strong personal faith and a proven expertise in the field of development and communications," said BCH President Michael C. Blackwell, announcing her appointment.

Gray's 25-year ministry to children and youth has covered the spectrum from house parent/child care worker to her former position as vice president for development and communications for Kentucky Baptist Homes for Children (KBHC).

During Gray's tenure at KBHC she coordinated fund-raising efforts, programs ranging from residential care to a statewide network of outpatient Christian counseling centers, and an array of children's and families programs.

KBHC President Bill Smithwick said of Gray's dedication to the children, "There was never a time when she wasn't thinking about the kids, sharing their stories and their needs to people who could help. Her involvement with children and family ministries is more than a job and it shows."

Her commitment to child care flows from a desire to "provide kids a safe refuge where they can find hope and begin to heal – a place where they can experience the love and grace of God," she said. "Caring for hurting children and families through Christ-centered ministries is my calling – and my passion."

Although the problems facing young victims of physical and sexual abuse and neglect are great, Gray said the kind of help offered by agencies such as BCH and KBHC truly works. "I've seen the pain and grief of children who feel they have no one to turn to," she explained. "I'm committed to caring for them because I have seen first-hand the difference it can make in their lives."

Rose M. Mathis '86 has been elected senior vice president at First Citizens Bank in Wilkesboro, NC, where she also serves as a business manager for the Wilkes County area. In addition, she was recently the 1999 recipient of the Governor's Volunteer of

As a Gardner-Webb alumnus, your support this year is especially important because you will be taking part in the Decade Challenge.

WHAT IS THE DECADE CHALLENGE?

The Decade Challenge is a competition between decades and classes. The major goal of the Decade Challenge is to improve GWU's overall alumni giving percentage. Currently only 9 percent of alumni participate in giving to GWU. With your gift, you can:

- Help your Decade reach the highest alumni giving participation percentage;
- Help your Class reach the highest alumni giving participation percentage;
- Help your Decade achieve the greatest increase in alumni giving participation;
- Help your Decade raise the most money.

The Decade Challenge will not be successful unless everyone participates. So, your role in the Decade Challenge is to make a gift! The challenge has been issued ... will you accept it?

Contributions to the Annual Fund and the Bulldog Club count toward the Decade Challenge participation goals.

WHAT IS THE ANNUAL FUND?

The Annual Fund is made up of unrestricted dollars from alumni and friends. These gifts are essential to GWU because they are flexible enough to be used where they are most needed. Please know that your dollars directly benefit students since 65 cents from every dollar given goes toward instructional support, student services and student aid. Every dollar makes a difference.

Mail gifts to: Gardner-Webb University Decade Challenge, attn: Annual Giving Office, Boiling Springs, NC 28017

"I challenge all alumni to give generously to the Decade Challenge. It will help provide scholarships that make it possible for needy and deserving students to attend Gardner-Webb University in future years!"

CALL FOR ALUMNI

Alumni –you can make a $60,000 impact on the future of Gardner-Webb University by recruiting students on a volunteer basis with the current tuition, room, and board at $15,410 and the average financial aid package at over $10,000, GWU is an excellent choice for students and an affordable one as well.

First, you contact your local high school guidance offices to discover when college days are held. Second, you tell them that you would like to represent Gardner-Webb as an alumni recruiter during the next scheduled college day. Third, you contact Ray Hardee, Director of Admissions, at 1-800-253-6472 or rhardee@gardner-webb.edu. Ray or a member of his staff will send you an information packet consisting of handouts for the college fair, a Gardner-Webb University banner, and contact cards that are postage paid for you to easily mail back to the school. In addition, we will provide you with information about the most frequently asked questions, the personal admissions counselor for your area, and how you can help the student know more about the Gardner-Webb experience.

Finally, as your REWARD for helping us with this endeavor, we will send you an embroidered Gardner-Webb University Sweatshirt in the size of your choice. Plus, you get the benefit of making of difference in the lives of students and our University.

We are eager to hear from you! Call us today at 1-800-253-6472 or e-mail us at rhardee@gardner-webb.edu.

*Memories are made at Gardner-Webb University.
The annual Senior Pinning ceremony, held in the fall, is one of the most moving
