Gardner-Webb University

Digital Commons @ Gardner-Webb University

Gardner-Webb NewsCenter Archive

Gardner-Webb Publications

8-15-2014

Dozens Volunteer to Help New Gardner-Webb Students Move Onto Campus

Office of University Communications

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcommons.gardner-webb.edu/gardner-webbnewscenter-archive

Dozens Volunteer to Help New Gardner-Webb Students Move Onto Campus

webpublish.gardner-webb.edu/newscenter/dozens-volunteer-to-help-new-gardner-webb-students-move-onto-campus/

Office of University Communications

August 15, 2014

Bulldog Movers Welcome First-Time GWU Residents, Families

BOILING SPRINGS, N.C. — For decades, a volunteer group has helped ease the transition for new Gardner-Webb students who move onto the University's main campus. The Bulldog Movers are among the first to greet students and their families during orientation weekend each August.

This year, more than 60 faculty, staff and student volunteers carried boxes, suitcases and bags from cars to campus residences, providing helping hands and a friendly welcome to the newest members of the Gardner-Webb community.

"The emphasis for Bulldog Movers is on reducing the stress of what is ultimately a very stressful day for students and their families," said John Johnson, GWU Director of Housing and Residence Education. "The Bulldog Movers help students complete the unloading of their belongings quickly, giving them time to set up their residence space, spend time with their families and meet people on campus, instead of worrying about getting luggage into the rooms."

GWU freshman Sydney Shuping even encountered a familiar face as she moved into her residence hall. She discovered that one of her movers, GWU senior Jonelle Bobak, shares the same hometown and went to the same daycare growing up. "It's such a relief that I know someone already, and I know I'm not alone anymore," Shuping offered. "The Bulldog Movers are a tremendous help. They have carried everything, making this first day so much easier for me."

GWU roommates Christian Jessup and Tanner Hoyle moved into their residence a day earlier than many of their classmates. The students then spent Friday helping their peers move into their rooms, said Dr. Tracy Jessup, GWU Vice President for Christian Life and Service, senior minister to the University, and Christian's father. Jessup has long served as a Bulldog Mover. This year, he experienced the Movers program as a parent and as a staff volunteer.

"It is our hope that the presence of Bulldog Movers reflects the presence of Christ," Jessup offered. "While it is an exciting time for new students and their parents, it can also be a stressful and emotional time. Through our service, we hope to reduce that stress."

Volunteers gathered early on freshmen move-in day to organize, share a Christian devotional, and discuss the services they would provide. The Bulldog Movers serve each year as an active example of Gardner-Webb's continuous commitment to community and service, said Neal Payne, GWU Associate Minister to the University for Student Ministries.

"As a Christian university, we remind our volunteers they are one of the first contacts with these people moving in," Payne shared. "Some students fit right in, while some are nervous. Movers are a witness to those students and their parents, encouraging them, and serving them."

Volunteers are an integral part of the culture at Gardner-Webb, and the Bulldog Movers offer comfort and peace to new members of the GWU family, said Jessica Herndon, director of First-Year Programs. "Many first-year students struggle with loneliness and feeling accepted, so making connections with faculty, staff and students during the first moments of their arrival is so important," Herndon said. "It shows new students and families that we care and are truly excited for their arrival."

Located in Boiling Springs, N.C., Gardner-Webb University provides exceptional educational opportunities within a Christian environment, preparing students to think critically, to succeed professionally, and to serve faithfully as members of their local and global communities.